LETTER

O.F.

Alexander Tillock to John Monteith, Esq. Glasgow.

Dear Sir,

Your note of the 30th ult. I would have answered in course; but wished first to be able to inform you what paper we had taken the article from which respected Gustavus Yassa. By this day's post, have sent you a copy of the Oracle of Wednesday the 25th—in the last column of the 3d page, you will find the article from which we inferted ferted the one in the Star of the 27th ult.—If it be erroneous, you will see it had not its origin with us. As to G. V. I know nothing about him.

After examining the paragraph in the Oracle, which immediately follows the one in question, I am inclined to believe that the one respecting G. V. may have been fabricated by some of the advocates for continuing the Slave-trade, for the purpose of weakening the force of the evidence brought against that trade; for, I believe, if they could, they would stifle the evidence altogether.

Having fent you the Oracle, we have fent all that we can say about the business. I am,

DEAR SIR,

Your most humble Servant,
ALEX. TILLOGH.

Star Office, 5th May, 1792.

LETTER

From the Rev. J. Baker, of May Fair Chapel, London, to Mr. Gustavus Vassa, at David Dale's, Esq. Glasgow.

DEAR SIR,

I went after Mr. Millan (the printer of the Oracle), but he was not at home. I understood that an apology would be made to you, and I desired it might be a proper one, such as would give fair satisfaction, and take off any disadvantageous impressions pressions which the paragraph alluded to may have made. Whether the matter will bear an action or not, I do not know, and have not inquired whether you can punish by law; because I think it is not worth while to go to the expence of a law-suit, especially if a proper apology is made; for, can any man that reads your Narrative believe that you are not a native of Africa?—I see therefore no good reason for not printing a fifth edition, on account of a scandalous paragraph in a newspaper.

I remain,

DEAR SIR,

Your fincere friend, J. BAKER.

Grosvenor-street, May 14, 1792.

To the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of the Parliament of Great Britain.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

PERMIT me with the greatest deference and respect, to lay at your feet the following genuine Narrative; the chief design of which is to excite in your august alfemblies a fense of compassion for the miferies which the Slave-trade has entailed on my unfortunate countrymen. By the horrors of that trade was I first torn away from all the tender connexions that were naturally dear to my heart'; but these, through the mysterious ways of Providence, I ought to regard as infinitely more than compensated by the introduction I have thence obtained to the knowledge of the Christian religion, and of a nation which, by its liberal fentiments, its humanity, the glorious freedom of its government.

vernment, and its proficiency in arts and sciences, has exalted the dignity of human nature.

I am fensible I ought to entreat your pardon for addressing to you a work so wholly devoid of literary merit; but, as the production of an unlettered African, who is actuated by the hope of becoming an instrument towards the relief of his suffering countrymen, I trust that such a man, pleading in such a cause, will be acquitted of boldness and presumption.

May the God of Heaven inspire your hearts with peculiar benevolence on that important day when the question of Abolition is to be discussed, when thousands, in consequence of your determination, are to look for Happiness or Misery!

I am,

My Lords and Gentlemen, Your most obedient, And devoted humble servant, OLAUDAH EQUIANG, GUSTAVUS VASSA.

TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEES FOR THE ABOLITION OF THE SLAVE TRADE.

Magdalen College, Cambridge, May 26, 1790.

GENTLEMEN,

I TAKE the liberty, as being joined with you in the fame laudable endeavours to support the cause of humanity in the abolition of the Slave Trade, to recommend to your protection the bearer of this note, GUSTAVUS VASSA, an African; and to beg the savour of your assistance to him in the sale of his book.

I am, with great respect,
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servant,
P. PECKARD.

Manchester, July 23, 1790.
THOMAS WALKER has great pleasure in recommending the sale of the NAKRATIVE of GUSTAVUS VASSA to the friends of justice and humanity, he being well entitled to their protection and support, from the united testimonies of the Rev. T. Clarkson of London; Dr. Peckard, of Cambridge; and Sampson and Charles Lloyd, Esqrs. of Birmingham.

Sheffield.

Sheffield, August 20, 1790.

In confequence of the recommendation of Dr. Peckard of Cambridge; Messrs. Lloyd of Birmingham; the Rev. T. Clarkson of London; Thomas Walker, Thomas Cooper, and Isaac Moss, Esqrs. of Manchester; we beg leave also to recommend the sale of the NARRATIVE of GUSTAVUS VASSA to the friends of humanity in the town and neighbourhood of Sheffield.

Dr. Brown, Wm. Shore, Efq. Samuel Marshall. Rev. Ja. Wilkinson, Rev. Edw. Goodwin, John Barlow.

Nottingham, 17th January, 1791.

In consequence of the respectable recommendation of several gentlemen of the first character, who have borne testimony to the good sense, intellectual improvements, and integrity of Gustavus Vassa, lately of that injured and oppressed class of men, the injured Africans; and further convinced of the justice of his recommendations, from our own personal interviews with him, we take the liberty also to recommend the said GusTAVUS VASSA to the protection and assistance of the friends of humanity.

LETTER

To. Mr. O'BRIEN, CARRICKFERGUS. (Per favour of Mr. Gustavus Vassa.)

Belfast, December 25, 1791.

DEAR SIR,

The bearer of this, Mr. Gustavus VASSA, an enlightened African, of good fenfe, agreeable manners, and of an excellent character, and who comes well recommended to this place, and noticed by the first people here, goes to-morrow for your town, for the purpose of vending some books, written by himself, which is a Narrative of his own Life and Sufferings, with some account of his native country and its inhabitants. He was torn from his relatives and country (by the more favage white men of England) at an early period in life; and during his refidence in England, at which time I have feen him, during my agency for the American prisoners, with Sir William Dolben, Mr. Granville Sharp, Mr. Wilkes, and many other diftinguished characters; he supported an irreproachable character, and was a principal inflaument in bringing about the motion for a repeal of the Slave-I beg leave to introduce him to your notice and civility; and if you can spare the time, your introduction of him perforally to your neighbours may be of effential benefit to him.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient humble fervant, THOS. DIGGES.

LET-

To Rowland Webster, Esq. Stockton. (Per favour of Mr. Gustavus Vassa.)

DEAR SIR,

I TAKE the liberty to introduce to your knowledge Mr. Gustavus V assa, an African of distinguished merit. He has recommendations to Stockton, and I am happy in adding to the number. To the principal supporters of the Bill for the Abolition of the Slave-trade he is well known; and he has, himself, been very instrumental in promoting a plan so truly conducive to the interests of Religion and Humanity. Mr. Vassa has published a Narrative which clearly delineates the iniquity of that unnatural and destructive commerce; and I am able to affert, from my own experience, that he has not exaggerated in a fingle particular. This work has been mentioned in very favourable terms by the Reviewers, and fully demonstrates that genius and worth are not limited to country or complexion .-He has with him some copies for sale, and if you can conveniently affift him in the disposal thereof, you will greatly oblige,

DEAR SIR,
Your friend and fervant,
WILLIAM EDDIS.

Durbam, Oct. 25, 1792.

Hull, November 12, 1792.

THE bearer hereof, Mr. Gustavus Vassa, an African, is recommended to us by the Rev. Dr. Peckard, Dean of Peterborough, and by many other very respectable characters, as an intelligent and upright man; and as we have no doubt but the accounts we have received are grounded on the best authority, we recommend him to the affishance of the friends of humanity in this town, in promoting subscriptions to an interesting Narrative of his Life.

John Sykes, Mayor,
Thomas Clarke, Vicar,
William Hornby, Esq. of Gainsborough.

MONTHLY

MONTHLY REVIEW FOR JUNE 1789. PAGE 551.

WE entertain no doubt of the general authenticity of this very intelligent African's story; though it is not improbable that some English writer has affisted him in the compilement, or, at least, the correction of his book; for it it sufficiently well-written. The Narrative wears an honest face: and we have conceived a good opinion of the man, from the artless manner in which he has detailed the variety of adventures and viciffitudes which have fallen to his lot. His publication appears very feafonably, at a time when negroe-flavery is the subject of public investigation; and it seems calculated to increase the odium that has been excited against the West-India planters, on account of the cruelties that some are said to have exercised on their flaves, many inflances of which are here detailed.

The fable author of this volume appears to be a very fenfible man; and he is, furely, not the less worthy of credit from being a convert to Christianity. He is a Methodist, and has filled many pages towards the end of his work, with accounts of his dreams, visions, and divine influences; but all this, supposing him to have been under any delusive influence, only serves to convince us that he is guided by principle, and that he is not one of those poor converts, who having undergone the ceremony of baptism, have remained content with that portion only of the Christian religion; instances of which are said to be almost innumerable in America and the West Indies.

Gustavus Vassa appears to possess a very different character; and, therefore, we heartily wish success to his publication, which we are glad to see has been encouraged by a very respectable subscription.

The GENERAL MAGAZINE and IMPARTIAL REVIEW for July 1789, characterizes this Work in the following Terms:

'This is "a round unvarnished tale" sof the checquered adventures of an African, who, early in life, was torn from his native country, by those savage dealers in a traffic disgraceful to humanity, and which has fixed a stain on the legislature of Britain. The Narrative appears to be written with much truth and simplicity. The author's account of the manners of the natives of his own province (Eboe) is interesting and pleasing; and the reader, unless perchance he is either a West-India planter, or Liverpool merchant, will find his humanity often severely wounded by the shameless barbarity practifed towards the author's hapless. countrymen in all our colonies; if he feel, as he ought, the oppressed and the oppressors will equal-Iy excite his pity and indignation. That so un-'just, so iniquitous a commerce may be abolished, is our ardent wish; and we heartily join in our author's

"author's prayer, "That the God of Heaven may infipire the hearts of our Representatives in Par"liament, with peculiar benevolence on that important day when so interesting a question is to be discussed; when thousands, in consequence of their determination, are to look for happiness or misery!"

THE kind reception which this Work has met with from many hundred persons, of all de nominations, demands the Author's most sincere thanks to his numerous friends; and he most respectfully solutions the favour and encouragement of the candid and unprejudiced friends of the Africans.

CHAP. I.

The Author's account of his country, and their manners and customs— Administration of justice — Embrenché — Marriage ceremony, and public Entertainments—Mode of living—Dress— Manufactures — Buildings—Commerce— Agriculture—War and Religion— Superstition of the natives—Funeral ceremonies of the priests or magicians—Curious mode of discovering poison—Some hints concerning the origin of the author's countrymen, with the opinions of disferent writers on that subject.

BELIEVE it is difficult for those who publish their own memoirs to escape the imputation of vanity; nor is this the only disadvantage under which they labour; it is also their missfortune, that whatever is uncommon is rarely, if ever, believed; and what is obvious

we are apt to turn from with difgust, and to charge the writer with impertinence. People generally think those memoirs only worthy to be read or remembered which abound in great or striking events; those, in short, which in a high degree excite either admiration or pity: all others they confign to contempt and oblivion. It is, therefore, I confels, not a little hazardous, in a private and obscure individual, and a stranger too, thus to follicit the indulgent attention of the public; especially when I own I offer here the history of neither a saint, a hero, nor a tyrant. I believe there are a few events in my life which have not happened to many; it is true the incidents of it are numerous; and, did I consider myself an European, I might fay my sufferings were great; but when I compare my lot with that of most of my countrymen, I regard myself as a particular favourite of Heaven, and acknowledge the mercies of providence in every occurrence of my life. If, then, the following narrative does not appear sufficiently interesting to engage general attention, let my motive be some excuse for its publication. I am not foolishly vain as to expect from it either immortality or literary reputation. If it affords any fatiffaction to my numerous friends, at whose request it has been written, or in the smallest degree promotes the interests of humanity the ends for which it was undertaken will be sully attained, and every wish of my heart gratisted. Let it therefore be remembered that, in wishing to avoid censure, I do not aspire to praise.

That part of Africa, known by the name of Guinea, to which the trade for flaves is carried on, extends along the coast above 3400 miles, from Senegal to Angola, and includes a variety of kingdoms. Of these, the most confiderable is the kingdom of Benin, both as to extent and wealth, the richness and cultivation of the foil, the power of its king, and the number and warlike disposition of the inhabitants. It is fituated nearly under the line, and extends along the coast about 170 miles, but runs back into the interior part of Africa, to a distance hitherto I believe unexplored by any traveller; and feems only terminated at length by the empire of Abyssinia, near 1500 miles from its beginning. kingdom is divided into many provinces or districts: in one of the most remote and fertile of which I was born, in the year 1745, fituated in a charming fruitful vale, named Essaka. The distance of this province from the capital of Benin and the sea coust must be very confiderable; for I had never heard of white men or Europeans, nor of the sea; and our subjection to the king of Benin was little more than nominal; for every transaction of the government, as far as my flender observation extended, was conducted by the chiefs or elders of the place. The manners and government of a people who have little commerce with other countries are generally very fimple; and the history of what passes in one family or village, may serve as a specimen of the whole nation. My father was one of those elders or chiefs I have spoken of, and was styled Embrenché; a term, as I remember, importing the highest distinction, and fignifying in our language a mark of grandeur. This mark is conferred on the person entitled to it, by cutting the skin across at the top of the forehead, and drawing it down to the eye-brows; and, while it is in this fituation, applying a warm hand, and rubbing it untill it shrinks up into a thick weal across the lower part of the forehead. Most of the judges and senators were thus marked; my father had long borne it : I had seen it conferred on one of my brothers, and I also was destined to receive it by my parents. Those Embrenché, or chief men, decided disputes. and punished crimes; for which purpose they always affemble together. The proceedings were generally short; and in most cases the law of retaliation prevailed. I remember a man was brought before my father, and the other judges, for kidnapping a boy; and although he was the fon of a chief or senator he was condemned to make recompense by a man or woman stave. Adultery, however, was sometimes punished with slavery or death: a punishment, which I believe is infflicted on it throughout most of the nations of Africa*: fo facred among them is the honour of the marriage-bed, and so jealous are they of the fidelity of their wives. Of this I recollect an inftance— A woman was convicted before the judges of adultery, and delivered over, as the custom was, to her husband to be punished. Accordingly, he determined to put her to death; but, it being found just before her execution, that she had an enfant at her breast, and no woman being prevailed on to perform the part of a nurse the was spared on account of the child. The men, however, do not preserve the same constancy to their wives which they expect from them; for they indulge in a plura-lity, though feldom in more than two.

their mode of marriage is thus: - both parties are usually betrothed when young by their parents (though I have known the males to betroth themselves). On this occasion a feast is prepared, and the bride and bridegroom stand up in the midst of all their friends, who are affembled for the purpose, while he declares she is thenceforth to be looked upon as his wife, and that no person is to pay any addresses to her. This is also immediately proclaimed in the vicinity, on which the bride retires from the assembly. Some time after she is brought home to her husband, and then another feast is made, to which the relations of both parties are invited: her parents then deliver her to the bridegroom, accompanied with a number of bleffings; at the same time they tie round her waist a cotton string, of the thickness of a goose quill, which none but married women are permitted to wear; the is now confidered as completely his wife; and at this time the dowry is given to the new married pair, which generally confifts of portions of land, flaves, and cattle, household goods, and implements of husbandry. These are offered by the friends of both parties; besides which the parents of the bridegroom present gifts to those of the bride, whose property she is looked upon before marriage;

marriage; but after it, the is esteemed the sole property of the husband. The ceremony being now ended, the sestival begins, which is celebrated with bonfires, and loud acclamations of joy, accompanied with music and dancing.

We are almost a nation of dancers, cians, and poets. Thus every great event, fuch as a triumphant return from battle, or other cause of public rejoicing, is celebrated in public dances, which are accompanied with fongs and music suited to the occasion. affembly is separated into four divisions, which dance either apart or in succession, and each with a character peculiar to itself. division contains the married men, who in their dances, frequently exhibit feats of arms, and the representation of a battle: To these fucceed the married women, who dance in the fecond division. The young men occupy the third; and the maidens the fourth. Each represents some interesting scene of real life, such as a great achievement, domestic employment, a pathetic story, or some rural fport; and, as the subject is generally founded on some recent event, it is therefore ever new. This gives our dances a spirit and variety which I have scarcely seen elsewhere *

. When I was in Smyrna I have frequently feen the Greeks dance after this manner.

We have many musical instruments, particularly drums of different kinds, a piece of music which resembles a guitar, and another much like a stickado. These last are chiesly used by betrothed virgins, who play on them on all grand festivals.

As our manners are simple, our luxuries are few. The dress of both sexes are nearly the same. It generally consists of a long piece of callico, or muslin, wrapped loosely round the body, somewhat in the form of a high-This is usually dyed blue, which land plaid. is our favourite colour. It is extracted from a berry, and is brighter and richer than any I have seen in Europe. Besides this, our women of distinction wear golden ornaments, which they dispose with some profusion on their arms and legs. When our women are not employed with the men in tillage, their usual occupation is spinning and weaving cotton, which they afterwards dye, and make into garments. They also manufacture earthen veffels, of which we have many kinds. Among the rest tobacco pipes, made after the same fashion, and used in the same manner; as those in turky*.

The bowl is earthen, curiously figured, to which a long reed is fixed as a tube. This tube is sometimes so long.

Our manner of living is entirely plain; for as yet the natives are unacquainted with those refinements in cookery which debauch the taste: Bullocks, goats, and poultry, supply the greatest part of their food. These constitute likewise the principal wealth of the country, and the chief articles of its commerce. The flesh is usually stewed in a pan-To make it savory, we sometimes use also pepper and other spices; and we have salt made of wood ashes. Our vegetables are, mostly plantains, eadas, yams, beans, and Indian corn. The head of the family usually eats alone; his wives and flaves have also their separate tables. Before we taste food. we always wash our hands; indeed our cleanliness on all occasions is extreme; but on this it is an indispensable ceremony. After washiing, libation is made, by pouring out a small. portion of the drink on the floor, and toffing a small quantity of the food in a certain place, for the spirits of departed relations, which the natives suppose to preside over their conduct. and guard them from evil. They are totally unacquainted with strong or spirituous liquors; and their principal beverage is palm wine.

long as to be borne by one, and frequently out of grandeur by two boys.

A 5,

This.

This is got from a tree of that name, by tapbing it at the top, and fastening a large gourd to it; and sometimes one tree will yield three: or four gallons in a night. When just drawn, it is of a most delicious sweetness; but in a few days it acquires a tartish and more spirituous flavour; though I never faw any one intoxicated by it. The same tree also produces nuts and oil. Our principal luxury is in perfumes; one fort of these is an odoriferous wood of delicious fragrance; the other a kind of earth; a small portion of which thrown. into the fire diffuses a most powerful odour  We beat this wood into powder, and mix it with palm-oil; with which both men and women perfume themselves.

In our buildings we study convenience rather than ornament. Each master of a samily has a large square piece of ground surrounded with a moat or sence, or inclosed with a wall made of red earth tempered, which, when dry, is as hard as brick. Within this are his houses to accommodate his samily and slaves; which, if numerous, frequently present the appearance of a village. In the middle stands the principal building, appropriated to the sole use of the master, and consisting of two apartments; in one of which he fits in the day with his family, the other is left apart for the reception of his friends. He has befides this a distinct apartment, in which he fleeps, together with his male children. On each fide are the apartments of his wifes, who have also their separate day and night houses. The habitations of the flaves and their families are distributed throughout the rest of the inclosure. These houses never exceed one story in height, they are always built of wood, or stakes driven into the ground, crossed with wattles, and neatly plaistered within and without. The roof is thatched with reeds. Our day houses are left open at the sides; but those in which we fleep are always covered, and plaftered in the infide with a composition mixed with cow dung, to keep off the different infects which annoy us during the night. The walls and floors also of these are generally covered with mats. Our beds confift of a platform, raised three or four feet from the ground, on which are laid ikins, and different parts of a spungy tree called plantain. Our covering is calico or muslin, the same as our The usual seats are a few logs wood; but we have benches, which are generally A 6.

nerally perfumed to accommodate strangers: these compose the greater part of our household furniture. Houses so constructed and furnished require but little skill to erect them. Every man is a sufficient architect for the purpose. The whole neighbourhood afford their unanimous assistance in building them, and in return receive and expect no other recompence than a feast.

As we live in a country where nature is prodigal of her favours, our wants are few, and easily supplied; of course we have few manufactures. They consist for the most part of callicoes, earthen ware, ornaments, and instruments of war and hu sbandry. But these make no part of our commerce, the principal articles of which, as I have observed, are provisions. In such a state money is of little use; however we have some small pieces of coin, if I may call them such. They are made fomething like an anchor; but I do not remember either their value or denomination. We have also markets, at which I have been frequently with my mother. These are sometimes visited by stout mahogany-coloured men from the fouth- west of us: we call them Oye-Ehoe, which term fignifies red men living. at a distance. They generally bring us firearms, gunpowder, hats, beads, and dried fish. The

The last we esteemed a great rarity, as our waters were only brooks and springs. These articles they barter with us for odoriferous woods and earth, and our falt of wood-ashes. They always carry flaves through our land; but the strictest account is exacted of their manner of procuring them before they are suffered to pass. Sometimes indeed we sold flaves to them, but they were only prisoners of war, or fuch among us as had been convicted of kidnapping, or adultery, and some other crimes, which we esteemed heinous. This practice of kidnapping induces me to think, that, notwithstanding all our strictness, their principal business among us was to trepan our people. I remember too they carried great facks along with them, which not long after I had an opportunity of fatally. feeing applied to that infamous purpose.

Our land is uncommonly rich and fruitful, and produces all kinds of vegetables in great abundance. We have plenty of Indian corn, and vast quantities of cotton and tobacco. Our pine apples grow without culture; they are about the size of the largest sugar-loaf, and finely flavoured. We have also spices of different kinds, particularly pepper; and a variety of delicious fruits while I have never seen in Europe; together with gums of various.

kinds, and honey in abundance industry is exerted to improve those blessings of nature. Agriculture is our chief employ-ment; and every one, even the children and women, are engaged in it. Thus we are all habituated to labour from our earliest years. Every one contributes fomething to the common flock; and as we are unacquainted with idleness, we have no beggars. The benefits of fuch a mode of living are obvious. West India planters prefer the slaves of Benin or Eboe to those of any other part of Guinea, for their hardiness, intelligence, integrity, and zeal. Those benefits are felt by us in the general healthiness of the people, and in their vigour and activity; I might have added too in their comeliness. Deformity is indeed unknown amongst us. I mean that of shape Numbers of the natives of Eboe, now in London, might be brought in support of this affertion; for, in regard to complexion, ideas of beauty are wholly relative. I remember while in Africa to have feen three negro children who were tawny, and another quite white, who where univerfally regarded by myfelf and the natives in general, related to their complexions, as deformed. Our women too were, in my eyes at least, uncommonly graceful, alert, and modest to a degree degree of bashfulness; nor do I remember to have ever heard of an instance of incontinence amongst them before marriage. They are also remarkably cheerful. Indeed cheerfulness and affability are two of the leading characteristics of our nation.

Our tillage is exercised in a large plain or common, some hours walk from our dwellings, and all the neighbours resort thither in a body. They use no beasts of husbandry; and their only instruments are hoes, axes, shovels and beaks, or pointed iron to dig with. Sometimes we are visited by locusts, which come in large clouds, so as to darken the air, and destroy our harvest. This however happens rarely, but when it does a famine is produced by it. I remember an instance or two wherein this happened. This common is often the theatre of war; and therefore when our people go out to till their land, they not only go in . a body, but generally take their arms with them, for fear of a surprise; and, when they apprehend an invasion, they guard the avenues to their dwellings, by driving sticks into the ground, which are so sharp at one end as to pierce the foot, and are generally dipt in poifon. From what I can recollect of these battles, they appear to have been irruptions of one little state or district on the other, to obtain.

tain prisoners or booty. Perhaps they were incited to this by those traders who brought the European goods I mentioned amongst us. Such a mode of obtaining slaves in Africa is common; and I believe more are procured this way, and by kidnapping, than any other*. When a trader wants flaves, he applies to a chief of them, and temps him with his wares. It is not extraordinary, if on this occasion he yields to the temptation with as little firmness. and accepts the price of his fellow creature's. liberty with as little reluctance, as the enlightened merchant. Accordingly, he falls on his neighbours, and a desperate battle ensues. he prevails, and takes priloners, he gratifies his avarice by felling them; but, if his party be vanquithed, and he fall into the hands of the enemy, he is put to death: for, as he as been known to foment their quarrels, it is thought dangerous to let him survive; and no ransom can save him, though all other prisoners may be redeemed. We have fire-arms... bows and arrows, broad two-edged swords and javelins: we have shields also, which cover a man from head to foot. All are taught the use of these weapons. Even our women are warriors, and march boldly out to fight along with the men. Our whole district is a kind of militia: on a certain fignal given, fuch as the firing of a gun at night, they all rife in arms, and rush upon their enemy. It is perhaps fomething remarkable, that, when our people march to the field, a red flag or banner is borne before them. I was once a witness to a battle in our common. We had been all at work in it one day as usual, when our people were suddenly attacked. I climbed a tree at some distance, from which I beheld the fight. There were many women as well as men on both fides; among others my mother was there, and armed with a broad fword. After fighting for a considerable time with great fury, and many had been killed, our people obtained the victory, and took their enemy's Chief prisoner. He was carried off in great triumph; and, though he offered a large ranfom for his life, he was put to death. A virgin of note among our enemies had been flain in the battle, and her arm was exposed in our market-place, where our trophies were always exhibited. The spoils were divided according to the merit of the warriors. Those prisoners which were not fold or redeemed we kept as slaves: but, how different was their condition from that of the flaves in the West Indies! With us they do no more work than other mem ber members of the community, even their master. Their food, clothing and lodging, were nearly the same as theirs, except that they were not permitted to eat with those who were free born; and there were scarce any other difference between them than a superior degree of importance which the head of a samily possesses in our state, and that authority which, as such, he exercises over every part of his household. Some of these slaves have even slaves under them, as their own property, and for their own use.

 with.

As to religion, the natives believe that there is one Creator of all things, and that he lives in the sun, and is girded round with a belt, that he may never eat or drink: but according to some he smokes a pipe, which is our own favorite luxury. They believe he governs events, especially our deaths or captivity; but, as for the doctrine of eternity, I do not remember to have ever heard of it: some however believe in the transmigration of fouls in a certain degree. Those spirits, which are not transmigrated, such as their dear friends or relations, they believe always attend them, and guard them from the bad spirits of their foes. For this reason, they always, before eating, as I have observed, put some small portion of the meat, and pour some of their drink, on the ground for them: and they often make oblations of the blood of beafts or fowls at their graves. I was very fond of my mother, and almost constantly with her. When she went to make these oblations at her mother's tomb, which was a kind of small solitary thatched house, I sometimes attended her. There she made her libations, and spent most of the night in cries. and lamentation. I have been often extremely terrified on these occasions. loneliness of the place, the darkness of the night, and the ceremony of libation, naturally awful and gloomy, were heightened by my mother's lamentations; and these concurring with the doleful cries of birds, by which these places were frequented, gave an inexpressible terror to the scene.

We compute the year from the day on which the fun crosses the line; and, on its setting that evening, there is a general shout throughout the land; at least, I can speak from my own knowledge, throughout our vicinity. The people at the same time make a great noise with rattles not unlike the basket rattles used by children here, though much larger, and hold up their hands to heaven for a blessing. It is then the greatest offerings are made; and those children whom our wise men.

men foretel will be fortunate are then preffented to different people. I remember many used to come to see me, and I was carried about to others for that purpose. They have many offerings, particularly at full moons, generally too at harvest, before the fruits are taken out of the ground; and when any young animals are killed, sometimes they offer up part of them as a sacrifice. These offerings, when made by one of the heads of a family, serve for the whole. I remember we often had them at my father's and my uncle's, and their families have been present.
Some of our offerings are eaten with bitter herbs. We had a saying among us to any one of cross temper, 'That if they were to be eaten, they should be be eaten with bitter herbs.'

We practifed circumcision like the Jews, and made offerings and feasts on that occasion in the same manner as they did. Like them also our children were named from some event, some circumstance, or fancied foreboding, at the time of their birth. I was named Olaudah, which, in our language, signifies vicissitude, or fortunate alse; one favoured, and having a loud voice, and well spoken. I remember we never polluted the name of the object of our adoration; on the contrary, it was always mentioned

mentioned with the greatest reverence; and we were totally unacquainted with swearing, and all those terms of abuse and reproach which find their way so readily and copiously into the language of more civilized people. The only expressions of that kind I remember were, May you rot, or may you swell, or

'may a beast take you."

I have before remarked, that the natives of this part of Africa are extremely cleanly. This necessary habit of decency was with us a part of religion, and therefore we had many purifications and washings; indeed almost as many, and used on the same accasions, if my recollection does not fail me, as the Jews. Those that touched the dead at any time were obliged to wash and purify themselves before they could enter a dwelling-house. woman too, at certain times, was forbidden to come into a dwelling-house, or touch any person, or any thing we eat. I was so fond of my mother, I could not keep from her, or avoid touching her at some of those periods, in consequence of which I was obliged to be kept out with her, in a little house made for that purpose, till offering was made, and then we were purified.

Though we had no places of public worship, we had priests and magicians, or wife men.

I do

I do not remember whether they had different offices, or whether they were united in the fame persons, but they were held in great reverence by the people. They calculated our time, and foretold events, as their name imported, for we called them Ah-affoe-waycah, which fignifies calculators or yearly men. our year being called Ah affoe. They wore their beards; and, when they died, they were fucceeded by their fons. Most of their implements and things of value were interred along with them. Pipes and tobacco were also put into the grave with the corpse, which was always perfumed and ornamented; and animals were offered in facrifice to them. None accompanied their funerals, but those of the same profession or tribe. These buried them after funfet, and always returned from the grave by a different way from that which they went.

These magicians were also our doctors or physicians. They practised bleeding by cupping; and were very successful in healing wounds, and expelling poisons. They had likewise some extraordinary method of discovering jealously, thest and poisoning; the success of which no doubt they derived from the unbounded influence over the credulity and superstition of the people. I do not remember member what those methods were, except that as to poisoning. I recollect an instance or two, which I hope it will not be deemed impertinent here to infert, as it may ferve as a kind of specimen of the rest, and is still used by the negroes in the West indies. young woman had been poisoned, but it was not known by whom: the doctors ordered the corple to be taken up by some persons, and carried to the grave. As soon as the bearers had raised it on their shoulders, they seemed seized with some * sudden impulse, and ran to and fro, unable to stop themselves. At last after having passed through a number of thorns and prickly bushes unhurt, the corpse fell from them close to a house, and defaced it in the fall; and the owner being taken up, he immediately confessed the possoning +.

† An instance of this kind happen d at Montserrat in the West Indies in the year 17.3. I then belonged to the Charming Sally, Capt Doran.—The Chief mate, hir. Manssield, and some of the crew being one day on hore, were present at the burying of a poisoned neground. Though they had often heard of the circumstance the running in such cases, and had even seen it, they magined it to be a trick of the corpse bearers. The late therefore desired two of the sailors to take up the standard of the same opinion, readily obeyed; but they had scarcely

The natives are extremely cautious about Poison. When they buy any eatable, the seller kisses it all round before the buyer, to shew him it is not poisoned, and the same is done when any meat or drink is prefented, particularly to a stranger. We have serpents of different kinds, some of which are esteemed ominous when they appear in our houses, and these we never molest. I remember two of those ominous snakes, each of which was as thick as the calf of a man's leg, and in colour resembling a dolphin in the water, crept at different times into my mother's night-house where I always lay with her, and coiled themfelves into folds, and each time they crowed like a cock. I was defired by some of our wife men to touch these, that I might be interested in the good omens, which I did, for they are quite harmless, and would tamely suffer themselves to be handled; and then scarcely raised it to their shoulders before they began to run suriously about, quite unable to direct themselves, till at last, without intention, they came to the hut of him who had poisoned the girl. The cossin then immediately sell from their shoulders against the hut, and damaged part of the wall. The owner of the hut was taken into custody on this and confessed the poisoning— I give this story as it was related by the mate and trew on their return to the ship. The credit which is due to it I leave to the reader.

they were put into a large open earthen pan, and fet on one fide of the high-way. Some of our fnakes, however, were poisonous. One of them croffed the road one day as I was standing on it, and passed between my feet, without offering to touch me, to the great surprise of many who saw it; and these incidents were accounted, by the wise men, and likewise by my mother and the rest of the people, as remarkable omens in my favour.

Such is the imperfect sketch my memory has furnished me with of the manners and customs of a people among whom I first drew my breath. And here I cannot forbear fuggesting what has long struck me very forcibly, namely, the strong analogy which even by this sketch, imperfect as it is, appears to prevail in the manners and customs of my countrymen, and those of the Jews, before they reach, ed the Land of Promise, and particularly the patriarchs, while they were yet in that pastoral state which is described in Genesis—an analogy which alone would induce me to think that the one people had fprung from the other*. Indeed this is the opinion of Dr. Gill, who, in his Commentary on Genesis, very ably deduces the pedigree of the Africans from Afer and Afra, the descendants of Abraham by Keturah his wife and concubine, (for both these titles are applied to her). It is also conformable to the sentiments of Dr. John Clarke, formerly Dean of Sarum, in his Truth of the Christian Religion: Both these authors concur in ascribing to us this original. reasonings of those gentlemen are still further confirmed by the Scripture Chronology of the Rev. Arthur Bedford; and, if any further corroboration were required, this resemblance in so many respects, is a strong evidence in sup-port of the opinion. Like the Israelites in their primitive state, our government was conducted by our chiefs, our judges, our wife men, and elders; and the head of a family with us enjoyed a similar authority over his household with that which is ascribed to Abraham and the other patriarchs. The law of retaliation obtained almost universally with us as with them: and even their religion appeared to have shed upon us a ray of its glory, though broken and spent in its passage, or eclipsed by the cloud with which time, tradition, and ignorance, might have enveloped it: for we had our circumcifion (a rule I believe peculiar to that people): we had also our sacrifices and burntofferings, our washings and purifications, on the same occasions as they had,

. As to the difference of colour between the Eboan Africans and the modern Jews, I shall not presume to account for it. It is a subject which has engaged the pens of men of both genius and learning, and is far above my strength. The most able and Reverend Mr. T. Clarkson, however, in his much admired Essay on the Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species, has ascertained the cause in a manner that at once folves every objection on that account, and, on my mind at least, has produced the fullest conviction. therefore refer to that performance for the theory *, contenting myself with extracting a fact as related by Dr. Mitchel †. "The "Spaniards who have inhabited America, " under the torrid zone, for any time, are be-" come as dark coloured as our native Indians " of Virginia, of which I myself have been a " witness." There is also another instance : of a Portuguese settlement at Mitomba. river in Sierra Leona, where the inhabitants are bred from a mixture of the first Portuguese discoverers with the natives, and are now become, in their complexion, and in the woolly quality of their hair, perfect negroes, retaining,

These instances, and a great many more which might be adduced, while they shew how the complexions of the same persons vary in different climates, it is hoped may tend also to remove the prejudice that some conceive against the natives of Africa on account of their colour. Surely the minds of the Spaniards did not change with their complexions! Are there not causes enough to which the apparent inferiority of an African may be ascribed, without limiting the goodness of God, and supposing he forebore to stamp understanding on certainly his own image, because " carved in ebony?" Might it not naturally be ascribed to their situation? When they come among Europeans, they are ignorant of their language, religion, manners, and customs. Are any pains taken to teach them these? Are they treated as men? Does not flavery itself depress the mind, and extinguish all us fire, and every noble sentiment? But, above all, what advantages do not a refined people possess over those who are rude and uncultivated? Let the polished and haughty. European recollect, that his ancestors were once, like the Africans, uncivilized, and even barbarous. Did Nature make them inferior to their sons? and should they too have been made slaves? Every rational mind answers, No. Let such reflections as these melt the pride of their superiority into sympathy for the wants and miseries of their sable brethren, and compel them to acknowledge, that understanding is not confined to seature or colour. If, when they look round the world, they seel exultation, let it be tempered with benevolence to others, and gratitude to God, "who hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth "; and whose wisdom is not our wisdom, neisther are our ways his ways."

I HOPE the reader will not think I have trespassed on his patience in introducing myself to him with some account of the manners and customs of my country. They had been implanted in me with great care, and made an impression on my mind, which time could not erase, and which all the adversity and variety of fortune I have since experienced served only to rivet and record; for, whether the love of one's country be real or imaginary, or a lesson of reason, or an instinct of nature, I still look back with pleasure on the first scenes of my life, though that pleasure has been for the most part mingled with sorrow.

I have already acquainted the reader with the time and place of my birth. My father, besides many slaves, had a numerous family, of which seven lived to grow up, including myself and a sister, who was the only daughter. As I was the youngest of the sons, I became, of course, the greatest favourite with my mother, and was always with her; and she used to take particular pains to form my mind. was trained up from my earliest years in the arts of agriculture and war: my daily exercise was shooting and throwing javelins; and my mother adorned me with emblems, after the manner of our greatest warriors. In this way I grew up till I was turned the age of eleven, when an end was put to my happiness in the following manner: --- Generally, when the grown people in the neighbourhood were gone far in the fields to labour, the children affembled together in some of the neighbours premiles to play; and commonly some of us used to get up a tree to look out for any affailant, or kidnapper that might come upon us; for they fometimes took these opportunities of our parents' absence, to attack and carry off as many as they could feize. One day, as I was watching at the top of a tree in our yard, I saw one of those people come into the yard of our next neighbour but one, to kidnap, B 4

there being many flout young people in it. Immediately, on this, I gave the alarm of the rogue, and he was furrounded by the stoutest of them, who entangled him with cords, so that he could not escape till some of the grown people came and fecured him. But alas! ere long, it was my fate to be thus attacked, and to be carried off, when none of the grown people were nigh. One day, when all our people were gone out to their works as usual, and only I and my dear fifter were left to mind the house, two men and a woman got over our walls, and in a moment feized us both; and, without giving us time to cry out, or make resistance, they stopped our mouths, and ran off with us into the nearest wood. Here they tied our hands, and continued to carry us as far as they could, till night came on, when we reached a small house, where the robbers halted for refreshment, and spent the night. We were then unbound, but were unable to take any food; and, being quite overpowered by fatigue and grief, our only relief was some sleep, which allayed our misfortune for a short time. The next morning we left the house, and continued travelling all the day. For a long time we had kept the woods, but at last we came into a road which I believed I knew. I had now some hopes of being delivered:

livered; for we had advanced but a little way before I discovered some people at a distance, on which I began to cry out for their affaftance: but my cries had no other effect than to make them tie me faster and stop my mouth, and then they put me into a large fack. also stopped my fifter's mouth, and tied her hands; and in this manner we proceeded till we were out of the fight of these people.-When we went to rest the following night they offered us some victuals; but we refused them; and the only comfort we had was in being in one another's arms all that night, and bathing each other with our tears. But alas! we were foon deprived of even the smallest comfort of weeping together. The next day proved a day of greater forrow than I had yet experienced; for my fifter and I were then separated, while we lay clasped in each other's arms; it was in vain that we befought them not to part us: she was torn from me, and immediately carried away, while I was left in a state of distraction not to be described. I cried and grieved continually; and for feverally days did not eat any thing but what they forced into my mouth. At length, after many days travelling, during which I had often changed masters, I got into the hands of a chieftain, in a very pleasant country. This manihad two wives B 5

wives and some children, and they all used me extremely well, and did all they could to comfort me; particularly the first wife, who was something like my mother. Although I was a great many days journey from my father's house, yet these people spoke exactly the same language with us. This first master of mine, as I may call him, was a fmith, and my principal employment was working his bellows, which were the same kind as I had seen in my vicinity. They were in some respects not unlike the stoves here in gentlemen's kitchens; and were covered over with leather; and in the middle of that leather a stick was fixed, and a person stood up, and worked it, in the fame manner as is done to pump water out of a cask with a hand pump. I believe it was gold · he worked, for it was of a lovely bright yellow colour, and was worn by the women on their wrists and ancles. I was there I suppose about a month, and they at last used to trust me some little distance from the house. This liberty I used in embracing every opportunity to inquire the way to my own home; and I also sometimes, for the same purpose, went with the maidens, in the cool of the evenings, to bring pitchers of water from the springs for the use of the house. I had also remarked where the fun rose in the morning, and set in the the evening, as I had travelled along; and I had observed that my father's house was towards the rifing of the fun. I therefore determined to seize the first opportunity of making my escape, and to shape my course for that quarter; for I was quite oppressed and weighed down by grief after my mother and friends; and my love of liberty, ever great, was strengthened by the mortifying circumstance of not daring to eat with the free-born children. although I was mostly their companion.-While I was projecting my escape one day, an unlucky event happened, which quite difconcerted my plan, and put an end to my hopes. I used to be sometimes employed in affilting an elderly woman slave to cook and take care of the poultry; and one morning, while I was feeding some chickens, I happened to toss a small pebble at one of them, which hit it on the middle, and directly killed The old flave, having foon after miffed the chicken, inquired after it; and on my relating the accident (for I told her the truth, because my mother would never suffer me to tella lie) she flew into a violent passion, threatening that I should suffer for it; and, my master being out, she immediately went and told her mistress what I had done. This alarmed me very much, and I expected an instant B 6 flogging, flogging, which to me was uncommonly dreadful; for I had feldom been beaten at home: I therefore resolved to fly; and accordingly I ran into a thicket that was hard by. and hid myself in the bushes. Soon afterwards my mistress and the slave returned, and, not feeing me, they fearched all the house, but not finding me, and I not making answer when they called to me, they thought I had run away, and the whole neighbourhood was raifed in the pursuit of me. In that part of the country (as well as ours) the houses and villages were skirted with woods or shrubberies, and the bushes were so thick, that a man could readily conceal himself in them, so as to elude the strictest search. The neighbours continued the whole day looking for me, and feveral times many of them came within a few yards of the place where I lay hid. I expected every moment, when I heard a ruftling among the trees, to be found out, and punished by my master; but they never discovered me, though they were often so near that I even heard their conjectures as they were looking about for me; and I now learned from them that any attempt to return home would be hopeless. Most of them supposed I had fled towards home; but the distance was so great. and the way so intricate, that they thought I could could never reach it, and that I should be loss in the woods. When I heard this I was seized with a violent panic, and abandoned mytelf to despair. Night too began to approach, and aggravated all my sears. I had before entertained hopes of getting home, and had determined when it should be dark to make the attempt; but I was now convinced it was fruitless, and began to consider that, if possibly I could escape all other animals, I could not those of the human kind; and that, not knowing the way, I must perish in the woods.—Thus was I like the hunted deer:

"Ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry whifp'ring breath Convey'd a foe, and ev'ry foe a death."

I heard frequent rustlings among the leaves; and being pretty sure they were snakes, I expected every instant to be stung by them.— This increased my anguish; and the horror of my situation became now quite insupportable. I at length quitted the thicket, very faint and hungry, for I had not eaten or drank any thing all the day, and crept to my master's kitchen, from whence I set out at first, and which was an open shed, and laid myself down in the ashes, with an anxious wish for death to relieve me from all my pains. I was scarcely awake in the morning, when the old woman slave who was the first up, came to light the fire, and saw me in the fire place. She was very much surprised to see me, and could scarcely believe her own eyes. She now promised to intercede for me, and went for her master, who soon after came, and, having slightly reprimanded me, ordered me to be taken care of, and not ill-treated.

Soon after this my master's only daughter and child by his first wife sickened and died, which affected him so much that for some time he was almost frantic, and really would have killed himself, had he not been watched and prevented. However, in a finall time afterwards he recovered; and I was again fold. I was now carried to the left of the fun's rifing, through many dreary wastes and dismal woods, amidst the hideous roarings of wild beasts.-The people I was fold to used to carry me very often, when I was tired, either on their shoulders or on their backs. I saw many convenient well-built sheds along the roads, at proper distances, to accomodate the merchants and travellers, who lay in those buildings along with their wives, who often accompany them; and they always go well armed.

From the time I left my own nation I always found somebody that understood me till I came to the sea coast. The languages of different nations did not totally differ, nor were they so copious as those of the Europeans, particularly the English. They were therefore easily learned; and, while I was journeying thus through Africa, I acquired two or three different tongues. In this manner I had been travelling for a confiderable time, when one evening, to my great surprise, whom should I fee brought to the house where I was but my dear fifter? As foon as the faw me the gave a loud shriek, and ran into my arms—I was quite overpowered: neither of us could speak, but, for a confiderable time, clung to each other in mutual embraces, unable to do any thing but weep. Our meeting affected all who faw us: and indeed I must acknowledge. in honour of those sable destroyers of human rights, that I never met with any ill treatment, or faw any offered to their flaves, except tying them, when necessary, to keep them from running away. When these people knew we were brother and fifter, they indulged us to be together; and the man, to whom I supposed we belonged, lay with us, he in the middle, while she and I held one another by the hands across his breast all night; and thus for a while we forgot our misfortunes in the joy of being together; but even this small comfort was foon to have an end; for scarcely had the fatal fatal morning appeared, when the was again torn from me for ever! I was now more miserable, if possible, than before. The small relief which her presence gave me from pain was gone, and the wretchedness of my situation was redoubled by my anxiety after her fate, and myapprehensions left her fufferings should be greater than mine, when I could not be with her to alleviate them. Yes, thou dear partner of all my childish sports! thou sharer of my joys and forrows! happy should I have ever esteemed myself to encounter every misery for you, and to procure your freedom by the facrifice of my own! Though you were early forced from my arms, your image has been always riveted in my heart, from which neither time nor for tune have been able to remove it: fo that, while the thoughts of your sufferings have damped my prosperity, they have mingled with adversity, and increased its bitterness.-To that Heaven which protects the weak from the strong, I commit the care of your innocence and virtues, if they have not already received their full reward; and if your youth and delicacy have not long fince fallen victims to the violence of the African trader, the peftilential stench of a Guinea ship, the seasoning in the European colonies, or the lash and lust of a brutal and unrelenting overfeer.

I did not long remain after my fifter. I was again fold, and carried through a number of places, till, after travelling a confiderable time, I came to a town called Timnah, in the most beautiful country I had yet seen in Africa. It was extremely rich, and there were many rivulets which flowed through it, and supplied a large pond in the center of the town, where the people washed. Here I first saw and tasted cocoa nuts, which I thought superior to any nuts I had ever tasted before; and the trees, which were loaded, were also interpersed amongst the houses, which had commodious shades adjoining, and were in the same manner as ours, the insides being neatly plastered and white-washed. Here I also saw and tasted for the first time sugar-cane. Their money consisted of little white shells, the fize of the fingernail: they are known in this country by the name of core. I was fold here for one hundred and seventy-two of them by a merchant who lived and brought me there. I had been about two or three days at his house, when a wealthy widow, a neighbour of his, came there one evening, and brought with her an only fon, a young gentleman about my own age and fize. Here they saw me; and, having taken a fancy to me, I was bought of the merchant, and went home with them. Her house house and premises were situated close to one of those rivulets I have mentioned, and were the finest I ever saw in Africa: they were very extensive, and she had a number of slaves to attend her. The next day I was washed and perfumed, and when meal-time came. I was lead into the presence of my mistress, and eat and drank before her with her son. filled me with astonishment: and I could scarce help expressing my surprise that the young gentleman should suffer me, who was bound, to eat with him who was free; and not only so, but that he would not at any time either eat or drink till I had taken first, because I was the eldest, which was agreeable to our custom. Indeed every thing here, and all their treatment of me, made me forget that I was a flave. The language of these people elembled ours so nearly, that we understood each other perfectly. They had also the very iame customs as we. There were likewise slaves daily to attend us, while my young mafter and I, with other boys sported with our darts and bows and arrows, as I had been used to do at home. In this resemblance to my former happy state, I passed about two months, and I now began to think I was to be adopted into the family, and was beginning to be reconciled to my fituation, and to forget by degrees my miffortunes, when all at once the delusion vanished; for, without the least previous knowledge, one morning early, while my dear master and companion was still asleep, I was awakened out of my reverie to fresh sorrow, and hurried away even amongst the uncircumcised.

Thus, at the very moment I dreamed of the greatest happiness, I found myself most miserable; and it seemed as if fortune wished to give me this taste of joy only to render the reverse more poignant. The change I now experienced was as painful as it was sudden and unexpected. It was a change indeed from a state of bliss to a scene which is inexpressible by me, as it discovered to me an element I had never before beheld, and till then had no idea of, and wherein such instances of hardship and satigue continually occurred as I can never ressect on but with horror.

All the nations and people I had hitherto passed through resembled our own in their manners, customs and language; but I came at length to a country, the inhabitants of which differed from us in all those particulars. I was very much struck with this difference, especially when I came among a people who did not circumcise, and eat without washing their hands. They cooked also in iron pots, and had European cutlasses and cross bows, which were unknown to us, and fought with their fists among themselves. Their women were not so modest as ours, for they eat, and drank, and flept with their men. But, above all, I was amazed to see no sacrifices or offerings among them. In some of those places the people ornamented themselves with scars, and likewise filed their teeth very sharp. They wanted sometimes to ornament me in the same manner, but I would not fuffer them; hoping that I might some time be among a people who did not thus disfigure themselves, as I thought they did. At last, I came to the banks of a large river, which was covered with canoes, in which the people appeared to live with their household utensils and provisions of all I was beyond measure astonished at this, as I had never before seen any water larger than a pond or a rivulet; and my furprite was mingled with no small fear, when I was put into one of these canoes, and we began to paddle and move along the river. We continued going on thus till night; and, when we came to land, and made fires on the banks, each family by themselves, some dragged their canoes on shore, others stayed and cooked in theirs, and lay in them all night. the land had mats, of which they made tents, some in the shape of little houses: In these we flept; and, after the morning meal, we embarked barked again, and proceeded as before. I was often very much aftonished to see some of the women, as well as the men, jump into the water, dive to the bottom, come up again, and swim about. Thus I continued to travel, fometimes by land, fometimes by water. through different countries, and various nations, till, at the end of fix or feven months after I had been kidnapped, I arrived at the sea-coast. It would be tedious and uninteresting to relate all the incidents which befel me during this journey, and which I have not yet forgotten; of the various lands I paffed through, and the manners and customs of all the different people among whom I lived: I shall therefore only observe, that, in all the places where I was, the foil was exceedingly rich; the pomkins, aedas, plantains, yams, &c. &c. were in great abundance, and of incredible fize. There were also large quantities of different gums, though not used for any purpose; and every where a great deal of tobacco. The cotton even grew quite wild; and there was plenty of red wood. I law no mechanics whatever in all the way, except such as I have mentioned. The chief employment in all these countries was agriculture, and both the males and females, as with us, were brought up to it, and trained in the arts of war.

The first object which saluted my eyes when I arrived on the coast was the sea, and a slave. ship, which was then riding at anchor, and waiting for its cargo. These filled me with astonishment, which was soon converted into terror, which I am yet at a loss to describe, nor the then feelings of my mind. was carried on board I was immediately handled, and toffed up, to fee if I were found by some of the crew; and I was now perfuaded that I had got into a world of bad fpirits, and that they were going to kill me. Their complexions too differing to much from ours, their long hair, and the language they spoke, which was very different from any I had ever heard, united to confirm me in this Indeed, such were the horrors of my views and fears at the moment, that, if ten thousand worlds had been my own, I would have freely parted with them all to have exchanged my condition with that of the meanest flave in my own country. When I looked round the ship too, and saw a large surnace or copper boiling, and a multitude of black people of every description chained together, every one of their countenances expressing dejection and forrow, I no longer doubted of my fate; and, quite overpowered with horror and anguish, I fell motionless on the deck and fainted. When I recovered a little.

little, I found fome black people about me, who I believed were some of those who brought me on board, and had been receiving their pay; they talked to me in order to cheer me, but all in vain: I asked them if we were not to be eaten by those white men with horrible looks, red saces, and long hair? They told me I was not; and one of the crew brought me a small portion of spirituous liquor in a wine glass; but, being afraid of him, I would not take it out of his hand. One of the blacks therefore took it from him. and gave it to me, and I took a little down my palate, which, instead of reviving me, as they thought it would, threw me into the greatest consternation at the strange feeling it produced having never tasted any such liquor before. Soon after this, the blacks who brought me on board went off, and left me abandoned to despair. I now saw myself deprived of all chance of returning to my native country, or even the least glimpse of hope of gaining the shore, which i now considered as friendly: and I even wished for my former flavery, in preserence to my present situation, which was filled with horrors of every kind, fill heightened by my ignorance of what I was to undergo. I was not long suffered to indulge my grief; I was soon put down under the decks, and there I received such a salutation in my nostrils as I had never experienced in my life; so that, with the loathsomeness of the stench, and crying together, I became so fick and low that I was not able to eat, nor had I the least desire to taste any thing. I now wished for the last friend, Death, to re-lieve me; but soon, to my grief, two of the white men offered me eatables; and, on my refusing to eat, one of them held me fast by the hands, and laid me across, I think, the windlass, and tied my feet, while the other flogged me severely. I had never experienced any thing of this kind before; and, although not being used to the water, I naturally feared that element the first time I saw it; yet, nevertheless, could I have got over the nettings, I would have jumped over the fide; but I could not; and, besides, the crewused to watch us very closely who were not chained down to the decks, lest we should leap into the water; and I have seen fome of these poor African prisoners most feverely cut for attempting to do fo, and hourly whipped for not eating. This indeed was often the case with myself. In a little time after, amongst the poor chained men, found some of my own nation, which in a small degree gave ease to my mind. I inquired of them what was to be done with us? they gave me to understand we were to be carried to these white people's country to work for them. I then was a little revived, and thought, if it were no worse than working, my situation was not so desperate: but still I feared I should be put to death, the white people looked and acted, as I thought, in so savage a manner; for I had never feen among any people such instances of brutal cruelty; and this not only shewn towards us blacks, but also to some of the whites themselves. One white man in particular I faw, when we were permitted to be on deck, flogged so unmercifully with a large rope near the foremast, that he died in consequence of it; and they toffed him over the fide as they would have done a brute. This made me fear these people the more; and I expected nothing less than to be treated in the same manner. I could not help expressing my fears and apprehensions to some of my countrymen: I asked them if these people had no country, but lived in this hollow place the ship? they told me they did not, but came from a distant 'Then,' faid I, 'how comes it 'in all one. our country we never heard of them?' They told me, because they lived so very far off. I then asked, where were their women? had they any like themselves? I was told they had; And why, said I, do we not see them? they answered, because they were lest behind. Lasked

I asked how the vessel could go? they told me they could not tell; but that there were cloth put upon the masts by the help of the ropes I faw, and then the vessel went on; and the white men had fome spell or magic they put in the water when they liked in order to stop the vessel. I was exceedingly amazed at this account, and really thought they were spirits. I therefore wished much to be from amongst them, for I expected they would facrifice me: but my wishes were vain; for we were so quartered that it was impossible for any of us to make our escape. While we staid on the coast I was mostly on deck; and one day, to my great astonishment, I saw one of these vesfels coming in with the fails up. As foon as the whites saw it, they gave a great shout, at which we were amazed: and the more fo as the veffel appeared larger by approaching nearer. At last she came to an anchor in my fight, and when the anchor was let go, I and my countrymen who saw it were lost in astonishment to observe the vessel stop; and were now convinced it was done by magic. after this the other ship got her boats out, and they came on board of us, and the people of both ships seemed very glad to see each other. Several of the strangers also shook hands with us black people, and made motions with their hands, hands, fignifying, I suppose, we were to go to their country; but we did not understand At last, when the ship we were in had got in all her cargo, they made ready with many fearful noises, and we were all put under deck, so that we could not see how they managed the vessel. But this disappointment was the least of my forrow. The stench of the hold while we were on the coast was so intolerably loathsome, that it was dangerous to remain there for any time, and some of us had been permitted to stay on the deck for the fresh air; but now that the whole ship's cargo were confined together, it became absolutely pestilential. The closeness of the place, and the heat of the climate, added to the number in the ship, which was so crowded that each had scarcely room to turn himself, almost suffocated us. This produced copious perspirations, so that the air soon became unfit for respiration, from a variety of loathsome smells, and brought on a sickness amongst the slaves, of which many died, thus falling victims to the improvident avarice, as I may call it, of their purchasers. This wretched situation was again aggravated by the galling of the chains, now become insupportable; and the filth of the necessary tubs, into which the children often fell, and were almost suffocated. fhricks shricks of the women, and the groans of the dying, rendered the whole a scene of horror almost inconceivable. Happily perhaps for myself I was soon reduced so low here that it was thought necessary to keep me almost always on deck; and from my extreme youth I was not put in fetters. In this situation I expected every hour to share the fate of my companions, some of whom were almost daily brought upon deck at the point of death, which I began to hope would foon put an end to my miseries. Often did I think many of the inhabitants of the deep much more happy than myself; I envied them the freedom they enjoyed, and as often wished I could change my condition for theirs. Every circumstance I met with served only to render my state more painful, and heighten my apprehensions and my opinion of the cruelty of the whites. One day they had taken a number of fishes; and when they had killed and fatisfied themfelves with as many as they thought fit, to our astonishment who were on the deck, rather than give any of them to us to eat, as we expected, they toffed the remaining fish into the fea again, although we begged and prayed for some as well as we could, but in vain; and some of my countrymen, being pressed by hunger, took an opportunity, when they thought:

thought no one saw them, of trying to get a little privately; but they were discovered, and the attempt procured them some very severe floggings.

One day, when we had a fmooth sea, and moderate wind, two of my wearied countrymen, who were chained together (I was near them at the time), preferring death to such a life of misery, somehow made through the nettings, and jumped into the fea; immediately another quite dejected fellow, who, on account of his illness, was suffered to be out of irons, also followed their example; and I beheve many more would very foon have done the same, if they had not been prevented by the ship's crew, who were instantly alarmed. Those of us that were the most active were in a moment put down under the deck; and there was fuch a noise and confusion amongst the people of the ship as I never heard before, to ftop her, and get the boat out to go after the flaves. However, two of the wretches were drowned, but they got the other, and afterwards flogged him unmercifully, for thus attempting to prefer death to flavery. In this manner we continued to undergo more hardships than I can now relate; hardships which are inseparable from this accurred trade.— Many a time we were near fuffocation, from the want of fresh air, which we were often without for whole days together. This, and the stench of the necessary tubs, carried off many. During our passage I first saw slying fishes, which surprised me very much: they used frequently to fly across the ship, and many of them fell on the deck. I also now first saw the use of the quadrant. I had often with astonishment seen the mariners make obfervations with it, and I could not think what it meant. They at last took notice of my furprise; and one of them, willing to increase it, as well as to gratify my curiofity, made me one day look through it. The clouds appeared to me to be land, which disappeared as they passed along. This heightened my wonder: and I was now more persuaded than ever that I was in another world, and that every thing about me was magic. At last, we came in fight of the island of Barbadoes, at which the whites on board gave a great shout, and made many signs of joy to us. We did not know what to think of this; but, as the vessel drew nearer, we plainly saw the harbour, and other ships of different kinds and fizes: and we foon anchored amongst them off Bridge Town. Many merchants and planters now came on board, though it was in the evening. They put us in separate parcels, and examined us attentively.— They also made us jump, and pointed to the land, fignifying we were to go there. We thought by this we should be eaten by these ugly men, as they appeared to us; and when, foon after we were all put down under the deck again, there was much dread and trembling among us, and nothing but bitter cries to be heard all the night from these apprehensions, infomuch that at last the white people got some old flaves from the land to pacify us. They told us we were not to be eaten, but to work, and were foon to go on land, where we should see many of our country people. This report eafed us much; and fure enough, foon after we landed, there came to us Africans of all languages. We were conducted immediately to the merchant's yard, where we were all pent up together like so many sheep in a fold, without regard to sex or age. As every object was new to me, every thing I saw filled me with surprise. What struck me first was, that the houses were built with bricks, in stories, and in every other respect different from those I have seen in Africa: But I was still more assonished on feeing people on horseback. I did not know what this could mean; and indeed I thought these people were full of nothing but magical While I was in this aftonishment, one of my fellow prisoners spoke to a countryman of his about the horses, who said they were the same kind they had in their country. understood them, though they were from a distant part of Africa, and I thought it odd I had not feen any horfes there; but afterwards, when I came to converse with different Africans, I found they had many horses amongst them, and much larger than those I then saw. We were not many days in the merchant's custody before we were fold after their usual manner, which is this: - On a fignal given, (as the beat of a drum), the buyers rush at once into the yard where the flaves are confined, and make choice of that parcel they like best. The noise and clamour with which this is attended, and the eagerness visible in the countenances of the buyers, ferve not a little to increase the apprehension of the terrified Africans, who may well be supposed to consider them as the ministers of that destruction to which they think themselves devoted. In this manner, without scruple, are relations and friends separated, most of them never to fee each other again. I remember in the vessel in which I was brought over, in the men's apartment, there were several brothers who, in the sale, were fold in different lots; and it was very moving on this occasion to fee and hear their cries at parting. O, ye nominal Christians! might not an African ask you, learned you this from your God? who fays unto you, Do unto all men as you would men should do unto you. Is it not enough that we are torn from our country and friends to toil for your luxury and lust of gain? Must every tender feeling be likewise sacrificed to your avarice? Are the dearest friends and relations, now rendered more dear by their separation from their kindred, still to be parted from each other, and thus prevented from cheering the gloom of flavery with the small comfort of being together, and mingling their fufferings and forrows? Why are parents to lose their children, brothers their fisters, or husbands their wives? Surely this is a new refinement in cruehy, which, while it has no advantage to atone for it, thus aggravates diftress, and adds fresh horrors even to the wretchedness of flavery.

I now totally lost the small remains of comfort I had enjoyed in conversing with my countrymen; the women too, who used to wash and take care of me, were all gone different ways, and I never saw one of them afterwards.

I staid in this island for a few days; I believe it could not be above a fortnight; when I, and some few more slaves that were not saleable among the rest, from very much fretting, were shipped off in a sloop for North America. On the passage we were better treated than when we were coming from Africa, and we had plenty of rice and fat pork.

We were landed up a river a good way from the fea, about Virginia county, where we faw few or none of our native Africans, and not one foul who could talk to me. few weeks weeding grass and gathering stones in a plantation, and at last all my companions were distributed different ways, and only myfelf was left. I was now exceedingly miferable, and thought myfelf worse off than any of the rest of my companions; for they could talk to each other, but I had no person to speak to that I could understand. state I was constantly grieving and pining, and withing for death, rather than any thing else. While I was in this plantation, the gentleman to whom I supposed the estate belonged being unwell, I was one day sent for to his dwelling house to fan him: when I came into the room where he was, I was very much affrighted at some things I saw, and the more fo, as I had feen a black woman flave as I came through the house, who was cooking the dinner, and the poor creature was cruelly loaded with various kinds of iron machines: she had one particularly on her head, which locked her mouth so fast that she could scarcely speak, and could not eat nor drink. I was much astonished and shocked at this contrivance. which I afterwards learned was called the iron .

iron muzzle. Soon after I had a fan put into my hand, to fan the gentleman while he flept; and so I did indeed with great fear. While he was fast asleep I indulged myself a great deal in looking about the room, which to me appeared very fine and curious. The first object that engaged my attention was a watch which hung on the chimney, and was going. I was quite surprised at the noise it made, and was afraid it would tell the gentleman any thing I might do amiss: and when I immediately after observed a picture hanging in the room, which appeared constantly to look at me, I was still more affrighted, having never seen such things as these before. one time I thought it was fomething relative to magic; and not feeing it move, I thought it might be some way the whites had to keep their great men when they died, and offer them libations as we used to do our friendly In this state of anxiety I remained till my master awoke, when I was dismissed out of the room, to my no small satisfaction and relief, for I thought that these people were all made of wonders. In this place I was called Jacob; but on board the African Inow I was called Michael. I had been some time in this miserable, forlorn, and much dejected state, without having any one to talk to, which made my life a burden, when the kind and unknown hand of the Creator (who in very deed leads the blind in a way they know not) now began to appear, to my comfort; for one day the captain of a merchant ship, called the Industrious Bee, came on some business to my master's house. This gentleman, whose name was Michael Henry Pascal, was a lieutenant in the royal navy, but now commanded this trading ship, which was somewhere in the confines of the county many miles off. While he was at my master's house it happened that he saw me, and liked me so well that he made a purchase of me. I think I have often heard him fay he gave thirty or forty pounds sterling for me; but I do not now remember which. However, he meant me for a present to some of his friends in England; and I was fent accordingly from the house of my then master (one Mr. Campbell) to the place where the thip lay; I was conducted on horseback by an elderly black man (a mode of travelling which appeared very odd to me). When I arrived I was carried on board a fine large ship, loaded with tobacco, &c. and just ready to fail for England. I now thought my condition much mended; I had sails to lie on, and plenty of good victuals to eat; and every body on board used me very kindly, quite contrary contrary to what I had seen of any white people before; I therefore began to think that they were not all of the same disposition. few days after I was on board we failed for England. I was still at a loss to conjecture my destiny. By this time, hewever, I could smatter a little imperfect English; and I wanted to know as well as I could where we were going. Some of the people of the ship used to tell me they were going to carry me back to my own country, and this made me very happy. I was quite rejoiced at the idea of going back; and thought if I should get home what wonders I should have to tell. But I was reserved for another fate, and was soon undeceived when we came within fight of the English coast. When I was on board this ship my captain and master named me Gustavus Vasa. I at that time began to understand him a little, and refused to be called so, and told · him as well as I could that I would be called Jacob; but he said I should not, and still called me Gustavus: and when I resused to answer to my new name, which at first I did, it gained me many a cuff; so at length I submitted, and by which name I have been known ever fince. The ship had a very long passage; and on that account we had very short allowance of provisions. Towards the last we had only one pound and a half of bread per week, and about the same quantity of meat, and one quart of water a-day. We spoke with only one veffel the whole time we were at fea, and but once we caught a few fishes. In our extremities the captain and people told me, in jest, they would kill and eat me, but I thought them in earnest, and was depressed beyond measure, expecting every moment to be my last. While I was in this situation one evening they caught, with a good deal of trouble, a large shark, and got it on board. This gladdened my poor heart exceedingly, as I thought it would ferve the people to eat instead of their eating me; but very foon, to my aftonishment, they cut off a small part of the tail, and toffed the rest over the side. This renewed my consternation; and I did not know what to think of these white people; I very much feared they would kill and eat me. There was on board the ship a young lad who had never been at sea before, about four or five years older than myself: his name was Richard Baker. He was a native of America, had received an excellent education, and was of a most amiable temper. Soon after I went on board he shewed me a great deal of partiality and attention, and in return I grew extremely fond of him. We at length became became inseparable; and, for the space of two years, he was of very great use to me, and was my constant companion and instruc-Although this dear youth had many flaves of his own, yet he and I have gone through many sufferings together on shipboard; and we have many nights lain in each other's bosoms when we were in great distress. Thus such a friendship was cemented between us as we cherished till his death, which to my very great forrow happened in the year 1759, when he was up the Archipelago, on board his Majesty's ship the Preston: an event which I have never ceased to regret, as I lost at once a kind interpreter, an agreeable companion, and a faithful friend; who, at the age of fifteen, discovered a mind superior to prejudice; and who was not ashamed to notice, to affociate with, and to be the friend and instructor of, one who was ignorant, a stranger of a different complexion, and a flave! My master had lodged in his mother's house in America: he respected him very much, and made him always eat with him in the cabin. He used often to tell him jocularly that he would kill and eat me. times he would fay to me—the black people were not good to eat, and would ask me if we did not eat people in my country. I faid,

No: then he said he would kill Dick (as he always called him) first, and afterwards me. Though this hearing relieved my mind a little as to myself, I was alarmed for Dick, and whenever he was called I used to be very much afraid he was to be killed; and I would peep and watch to see if they were going to kill him: nor was I free from this consternation _ till we made the land. One night we lost a man overboard; and the cries and noise were so great and confused, in stopping the ship, that I, who did not know what was the matter, began, as usual, to be very much afraid, and to think they were going to make an offering with me, and perform some magic; which I still believed they dealt in. As the waves were very high, I thought the Ruler of the feas was angry, and I expected to be offered up to appeale him. This filled my mind with agony, and I could not any more that night close my eyes again to rest. However, when day-light appeared, I was a little eased in my mind; but still every time I was called I used to think it was to be killed. Some time after this, we saw some very large fish, which I afterwards found were called grampusses. They looked to me extremely terrible, and made their appearance just at dusk, and were fo near as to blow the water on the nip's ship's deck. I believed them to be the rulers of the sea; and, as the white people did not make any offerings at any time, I thought they were angry with them; and, at last, what confirmed my belief was, the wind just then died away, and a calm enfued, and, in consequence of it, the ship stopped going. supposed that the fish had performed this, and I hid myself in the fore-part of the ship, through fear of being offered up to appeale them, every minute peeping and quaking; but my good friend Dick came shortly towards me, and I took an opportunity to ask him, as well as I could, what these fish were? not being able to talk much English, I could but just make him understand my question; and not at all, when I asked him if any of. ferings were to be made to them? However, he told me these fish would swallow any body; which sufficiently alarmed me. Here he was called away by the captain, who was leaning over the quarter-deck, railing and looking at the fish: and most of the people were busied in getting a barrel of pitch to light, for them The captain now called me to play with. to him, having learned fome of my apprehensions from Dick; and having diverted himself and others, for some time with my fears, which appeared ludicrous enough in my crying and trembling, he dismissed me. The barrel of pitch was now lighted and put over the side into the water: by this time it was just dark, and the fish went after it; and, to my great joy, I saw them no more.

However, all my alarms began to subside when we got fight of land; and at last the ship arrived at Falmouth, after a passage of thirteen weeks. Every heart on board seemed gladdened on our reaching the shore, and none more than mine. The captain immediately went on shore, and sent on board some fresh provisions, which we wanted very much: we made good use of them, and our famine was foon turned into feasting, almost without ending. It was about the beginning of the spring 1757 when I arrived in England, and I was near twelve years of age at that time. I was very much struck with the buildings and the pavement of the streets in Falmouth; and, indeed, every object I saw filled me with new furprise. One morning, when I got upon deck; I saw it covered all over with the snow that fell over-night: as I had never feen any thing of the kind before, I thought it was falt; so I immediately ran down to the mate, and defired him, as well as I could, to come and fee how somebody in the night had thrown falt all over the deck.

He, knowing what it was, defired me to bring fome of it down to him: accordingly I took up a handful of it, which I found very cold indeed; and when I brought it to him he defired me to tafte it. I did so, and I was surprifed beyond measure. I then asked him what it was? he told me it was fnow: but I could not in any wife understand him. asked me if we had no fuch thing in my country? and I told him, No. I then asked him the use of it, and who made it; he told me a great man in the heavens, called God: but here again I was to all intents and purpoles at a loss to understand him; and the more so, when a little after I saw the air filled with it, in a heavy shower, which fell down on the same day. After this I went to church; and having never been at such a place before, I was again amazed at feeing and hearing the fervice. I asked all I could about it; and they gave me to understand it was worshipping God, who made us and all things. I was still at a great loss, and foon got into an endless field of inquiries, as well as I was able to speak and ask about things. However, my little friend Dick used to be my best interpreter; for I could make free with him, and he always instructed me with pleasure: and from what I could understand by him of this

God, and in feeing these white people did not sell one another as we did, I was much pleased; and in this I thought they were much happier than we Africans. I was astonished at the wisdom of the white people in all things Isaw; but was amazed at their not facrificing, or making any offerings, and eating with unwashed hands, and touching the dead. I likewise could not help remarking the particular slenderness of their women, which I did not at first like; and I thought they were not so modest and shamesaced as the African women.

I had often feen my master and Dick employed in reading; and I had great curiosity to talk to the books, as I thought they did; and so to learn how all things had a beginning: for that purpose I have often taken up a book, and have talked to it, and then put my ears to it, when alone, in hopes it would answer me; and I have been very much concerned when I found it remained silent.

My master lodged at the house of a gencleman in Falmouth, who had a fine little daughter about six or seven years of age, and she grew prodigiously fond of me; insomuch that we used to eat together, and had servants to wait on us. I was so much caressed by this samily that it often reminded me of the treatment I had received from my little noble African master. After I had been here a few days, I was fent on board of the ship; but the child cried fo much after me that nothing could pacify her till I was fent for again. is ludicrous enough, that I began to fear I should be betrothed to this young lady; and when my master asked me if I would stay there with her behind him, as he was going away with the ship, which had taken in the tabacco again? I cried immediately, and faid I would not leave him. At last, by stealth, one night I was sent on board the ship again; and in a little time we failed for Guernsey, where she was in part owned by a merchant, one Nicholas Doberry. As I was now amongst a people who had not their faces scarred, like some of the African nations where I had been, I was very glad i did not let them ornament me in that manner when I was with them. When we arrived at Guernsey, my master placed me to board and lodge with one of hismates, who had a wife and family there; and fome months afterwards he went to England, and left me in the care of this mate, together with my friend Dick. This mate had a little daughter, aged about five or fix years, with whom I used to be much delighted. often observed, that, when her mother washed her face, it looked very rosy; but, when she washed mine, it did not look so: I therefore tried oftentimes myself if I could not by washing make my face of the same colour as my little play-mate (Mary), but it was all in vain; and I now began to be mortified at the difference in our complexions. This woman behaved to me with great kindness and attention; and taught me every thing in the faine manner as she did her own child, and indeed in every respect treated me as such. I remained here till the summer of the year 1757, when my master, being appointed first lieutenant of his Majesty's ship the Roebuck, tent for Dick and me, and his old mate: On this we all left Guernfey, and fet out for England in a floop bound for London. As we were coming up towards the Nore, where the Roebuck lay, a man of war's boat came along afide to press our people, on which each man ran to hide himtelf. was very much frightened at this, though 'did not know what it meant, or what to think or do. However, went and hid myself also under a hencoop. Immediately the press gang came on board with their swords drawn, and learched all about, pulled the peo-ple out by force, and put them into the boat. At last was found out also; the man that found me held me up by the heels while they all made their sport of me, I roaring and crying out all the time most lustily; but at last the mate, who was my conductor, seeing this, came to my affiftance, and did all he could to pacify me; but all to very little purpose, till I had seen the boat go off. Soon afterwards we came to the Nore, where the Roebuck lay; and, to our great joy, my master came on board to us, and brought us to the ship, I was amazed indeed to see the quantity of men and the guns. However my surprise began to diminish, as my knowledge increased; and I ceased to feel those apprehensions alarms which had taken fuch strong posfession of me when I first came among the Europeans, and for some time after. I began now to pass to an opposite extreme; I was so far from being afraid of any thing new which I saw, that, after I had been some time in this ship, I even began to long for an engagement. My griefs too, which in young minds are not perpetual, were now wearing away; and I foon enjoyed myself pretty well, and felt tolerably easy in my present situa-tion. There was a number of boys on board, which still made it more agreeable; for we were always together, and a great part of our time was spent in play. I remained in this ship a considerable time, during which we made several cruises, and visited a variety of places; among others we were twice in Holland, and brought over several persons of distinction from it, whose names I do not now remember. On the passage, one day, for the diversion of those gentlemen, all the boys were called on the quarter-deck, and were paired proportionably, and then made to fight; after which the gentlemen gave the combatants from five to nine shillings each. This was the first time I ever fought with a white boy; and I never knew what it was to have a bloody note before. This made me fight most desperately; I suppose considerably more than an hour: and at last, both of us being weary, we were parted. I had a great deal of this kind of sport afterwards, in which the captain and the thip's company used very much to encourage me. Some time afterwards the ship went to Leith in Scotland, from thence to the Orkneys, where I was furprised in sceing scarcely any night; and from thence we failed with a great fleet, full of foldiers, for England. All this time we had never come to an engagement, though we were frequently cruifing off the coast of France; during which we chased many vestels, and took in all seventeen prizes. I had been learning many of the manœuvres of the ship during our cruise; and, I was several times made to fire the guns. One

One evening, off Havre de Grace, just as it was growing dark, we were standing off shore, and met with a fine large French-built frigate. We got all things immediately ready for fighting; and I now expected I should be gratified in seeing an engagement, which I had so long wished for in vain. But the very moment the word of command was given to fire, we heard those on board the other ship cry ' Haul down the jib;' and in that instant she hoisted English colours. There was instantly with us an amazing cry of—' Avast!' or 'stop firing;' and I think one or two guns had been let off, but happily they did no mischies. We had hailed them several times; but they not hearing, we received no answer, which was the cause of our firing. The boat was then fent on board of her, and she proved to be the Ambuscade man of war, to my no small disappointment. We returned to Portsmouth, without having been in any action, just as the trial of Admiral Byng (whom I faw feveral times during it): and my master having left the ship and gone to London for promotion, Dick and I were put on board the Savage floop of war, and we went in her to affilt in bringing off the St. George man of war, that had ran ashore omewhere on the coast. After staying a few weeks on board the Savage, Dick and I were fent on shore at Deal, where we remained fome fome short time, till my master sent for us to London, the place I had long defired exceedingly to see. We therefore both with great pleasure got into a waggon, and came to London, where we were received by a Mr. Guerin, a relation of my master. This gentlemen had two fifters, very amiable ladies, who took much notice and great care of me. Though I had defired so much to fee London when I arrived in it I was unfortunately unable to gratify my curiofity; for I had at this time the chilblains to such a degree that I could not stand for several months, and I was obliged to be fent to St. George's Hospital. There I grew so ill, that the doctors wanted to cut my leg off at different times, apprehending a mortification; but I always faid I would rather die than suffer it: and happily (I thank God) I recovered without the operation. After being there several weeks, and just as I had recovered, the small pox broke out on me, so that I was again confined; and I thought myself now particularly unfortunate. However I foon recovered again: and by this time my master having been promoted to be first lieutenant of the Preston man of war of fifty guns, then new at Deptford, Dick and I were fent on board. her, and soon after we went to Holland to bring over the late Duke of—to England.

While I was in this ship an incident hap-pened, which though trisling, I beg leave to relate, as I could not help taking particular notice of it, and confidering it then as a judgement of God. One morning a young man was looking up to the fore-top, and in a wicked tone, common on shipboard, d-d his eyes about fomething. Just at the mo-ment some small particles of dirt fell into his left eye, and by the evening it was very much inflamed. The next day it grew worse, and within fix or seven days he lost it. From this ship my master was appointed a lieutenant on board the Royal George. When he was going he wished me to stay on board the Preston, to learn the French horn; but the ship being ordered for Turkey I could not think of leaving my master, to whom I was very warmly attached; and I told him if he left me behind it would break my heart. This prevailed on him to take me with him; but he left Dick on board the Preston, whom I embraced at parting for the last time. The Royal George was the largest thip I had ever feen; fo that when I came on board of her I was surprised at the number of people, ffien, women, and children, of every denomination; and the largeness of the guns, many of them also of brass, which I had never seen before. Here were also shops-or stalls of every kind of goods, and people crying their different commodities about the ship as in a town. To me it appeared a little world, into which I was again cast without a friend, for I had no longer my dear companion Dick. We did not stay long here. My master was not many weeks on board before he got an appointment to be fixth lieutenant of the Namur, which was then at Spithead, fitting up for Vice-admiral Boscawen, who was going with a large fleet on an expedition against Louisbourgh. The crew of the Royal George were turned over to her, and the flag of that gallant admiral was hoisted on board, the blue at the maintop-gallant-mast head. There was a very great fleet of men of war of every description assembled together for this expedition, and I was in hopes foon to have an opportunity of being gratified with a fea-fight All things being now in readiness, this mighty fleet (for there was alto Admiral Cornish's fleet in company, destined for the East Indies, at last weighed anchor, and sailed. The two fleets continued in company for several days. and then parted; Admiral Cornish, in the Lenox, having first saluted our admiral in the Namur which he returned. We then steered for America; but, by contrary winds, we were driven off Teneriffe, where I was struck with its noted peak. Its prodigious height, and its form, resembling a sugar loaf, silled me with wonder. We remained in fight of this island fome days, and then proceeded for America, which we foon made, and got into a very commodious harbour called St. George, in Halifax, where we had fish in great plenty, and all other fresh provisions. We were here joined by different men of war and transport ships with soldiers; after which, our fleet being increased to a prodigious number of ships of all kinds, we sailed for Cape Breton in Nova Scotia. We had the good and gallant General Wolfe on board our ship, whose affability made him highly esteemed and beloved by all the men. He often honoured me as well as other boys, with marks of his notice; and faved me once a flogging for fighting with a young gentleman. We arrived at Cape Breton in the summer of 1758; and here the foldiers were to be landed, in order to make an attack upon Louisbourgh. My mafter had some part in superintending the landing; and here I was in a small measure gratified in seeing an encounter between our men and the enemy. French were posted on the shore to receive us, and disputed our landing for a long time: but at last they were driven from their trenches, trenches, and a complete landing was effected. Our troops pursued them as far as the. town of Louisbourgh. In this action many were killed on both fides. One thing remarkable I saw this day: - A lieutenant of the Princess Amelia, who, as well as my master, superintended the landing, was giving the word of command, and while his mouth was open a musket ball went through it, and passed out at his cheek. I had that day in my hand the scalp of an Indian king, who was killed in the engagement: the scalp had been taken off by an Highlander. I saw this king's ornaments too, which were very curious, and made of feathers.

Our land forces laid fiege to the town of Louisbourgh, while the French men of war were blocked up in the harbour by the fleet, the batteries at the same time playing upon them from the land. This they did with fuch effect, that one day I saw some of the ships set on fire by the shells from the batteries, and I believe two or three of them were quite burnt. At another time, about fifty boats belonging to the English men of war, commanded by Captain George Belfour of the Ætna fireship, and Mr. Laforey, another junior captain, attacked and boarded the only two remaining French men of war in the harbour. They also set fire to a se- D_4 venty-gun ship, but they brought off a sixty-four, called the Bienfaisant. During my During my stay here I had often an opportunity of being near captain Belfour, who was pleafed to notice me, and liked me fo much that he often asked my master to let him have me, but he would not part with me; and no confideration would have induced me to leave him. At last Louisbourgh was taken, and the English men of war came into the harbour before it, to my very great joy; for I had now more liberty of indulging myself, and I went often on shore. When the ships were in the harbour, we had the most beautiful procession on the water I ever faw. All the admirals and captains of the men of war, full dreffed, and in their barges, well ornamented with pendants, came alongfide of the Namur. The vice-admiral then went on shore in his barge, followed by the other officers in order of seniority, to take possession, as I suppose, of the town and fort. Some time after this, the French governor and his lady, and other persons of note, came on board our ship to dine. On this occasion our ships were dressed with colours of all kinds, from the topgallant-mast head to the deck; and this, with the firing of guns, formed a most grand and magnificent spectacle.

As foon as every thing here was fettled.

Admiral

Admiral Boscawen sailed with part of the fleet for England, leaving some ships behind with Rear Admirals Sir Charles Hardy and Durell. It was now winter; and one evening, during our passage home, about dusk, when we were in the channel, or near foundings, and were beginning to look for land, we descried seven fail of large men of war, which stood off shore. Several people on board of our ship said, as the two fleets were (in forty minutes from the first fight) within hail of each other, that they were English men of war; and some of our people even began to name some of the ships. By this time both fleets began to mingle, and our admiral ordered his flag to be hoisted. -At that instant, the other seet, which were French, hoisted their ensigns, and gave us a broadfide as they passed by. Nothing could create greater surprise and confusion among us than this! The wind was high, the fea rough, and we had our lower and middle deck guns housed in, so that not a single gun on board was ready to be fired at any of the French ships. However, the Royal William, and the Somerlet, being our sternmost ships became a little prepared, and each gave the French ships a broadfide as they patted by, lasterwards heard this was a French squa-D 5

dron, commanded by Moni. Conflans; and certainly had the Frenchman known our condition, and had a mind to fight us, they might have done us great mischief. But we were not long before we were prepared for an engagement. Immediately many things were toffed overboard; the ships were made ready for fighting as foon as possible; and, about ten at night, we had bent a new mainfail, the old being split. Being now in readiness for fighting, we wore ship, and flood after the French fleet, who were one or two in number more ships than we. However, we gave them chace, and continued purfuing them all night; and at day-light we faw fix of them, all large ships of the line, and an English East-indiaman, a prize they had taken. We chased them all day till between three and four o'clock in the evening, when we came up with, and passed within a musquet shot of one seventy four gun ship, and the Indiaman also, who now hoisted her colours, but immediately hauled them down again. On this we made a fignal for the other ships to take possession of her; and, supposing the man of war would likewise strike, we cheered, but she did not; though, if we had fired into her, from being so near, we must have taken her. To my utter furprise; the Somerset, who was the next ship a stern of the Namur, made way likewise; and, thinking they were fure of this French thip, they cheered in the fame manner, but still continued to follow us. The French Commodore was about a gun shot a-head of all, running from us with all speed; and about four o'clock he carried his fore-topmast overboard. This caused another loud cheer with us; and a little after the top mast came close by us; but to our great surprise, instead of coming up with her, we found she went as fast as ever, if not faster. The sea grew now much smoother; and the wind Julling, the seventy-four gun-ship we had passed came again by us in the very same direction, and so near, that we heard her people talk as she went by; yet not a shot was fired on either side; and about five or six o'clock, just as it grew dark, she joined her commodore. We chased all night: but the next day we were out of fight, fo that we faw no more of them; and we only had the old Indiaman (called Carnarvon I think) for our trouble. After this, we stood in for the channel, and foon made the land; and, about the close of the year 1758-9 we got sase to St. Helens; here the Namur ran aground; and also another large ship a sterm D 6

of us; but, by flarting our water, and toffing many things over board to lighten her, we got the ships off without any damage. We staid but a short time at Spithead, and then went into Portsmouth harbour to resit; from whence the admiral went to London; and my master and I soon followed, with a press-gang, as we wanted some hands to complete our complement.

Ir was now between three and four years fince I first came to Enlgand, a great part of which I had spent at sea; so that I became inured to that service, and began to consider myself as happily situated; for my master treated me always extremely well; and my attachment and gratitude to him were very great. From the various scenes I had beheld on ship-board, I soon grew a stranger to terror of every kind and was, in that respect at least almost an Englishman. I have often reslected with surprise that I never sell half the alarm at any of the numerous dangers I have been in, that I was filled with at the sirst sight of the Europeans, and at every act of theirs, even the most trifling, when I first came among them, and for some time afterw rds. That fear, however, which was the effect of my ignorance, wore away as I began to know them. I could now speak English tolerable well, and I perfectly underflood every thing that was faid. I not only felt myself quite easy with these new countrymen, but relished their society and manners. I no longer looked upon them as spirits but as men superior to us; and therefore I had the stronger desire to resemble them: to imbibe their spirit, and imitate their manners; I therefore embraced every occasion of improvement; and every new thing that I observed I treasured up in my memory. had long wished to be able to read and write; and for this purpose I took every op-portunity to gain instruction, but had made as yet very little progress. However, when I went to London with my master, I had soon an opportunity of improving myself, which I gladly embraced. Shortly after my arrival, he sent me to wait upon the Miss Guerins, who had treated me with much kindness. when I was there before; and they fent me to school.

While I was attending these ladies, their servants told me I could not go to heaven-unless unless I was baptized. This made me very uneasy; for I had now some faint idea of a future state: Accordingly I communicated my anxiety to the eldelt Miss Guerin, with whom I was become a favourite, and pressed her to have me baptized; when to my great joy, she told me I should. She had formerly asked my master to let me be baptized, but he had refused; however, the now infifted on it; and he, being under some obligation to her brother, complied with her request; so I was baptized in St. Margaret's church, Westminster, in February 1759, by my present name. The clergyman, at the same time, gave me a boo, called a guide to the Indians, written by the bishop of Sodor and Man. On this occasion, Miss Guerin did me the honour to stand as godmother, and afterwards gave me a treat. I used to attend these ladies about the town, in which service I was extremely happy; as I had thus many opportunities of seeing London, which I defired of all things. I was sometimes, however, with my master at his rendezvoushouse which was at the foot of Westminsterbridge. Here I used to enjoy myself in play-ing about the bridge stairs, and often in the watermen's wherries, with other boys. On one of these occasions there was another boy with, with me in a wherry, and we went out into the current of the river: while we were there two more flout boys came to us in another wherry, and, abusing us for taking the boat desired me to get into the other wherry-boat. Accordingly I went to get out of the wherry I was in; but just as I had got one of my feet into the other boat, the boys shoved it off, so that I fell into the Thames; and, not being able to swim, I should unavoidably have been drowned, but for the assistance of some waterman who providentially came to my relief.

The Namur being again got ready for sea. my master with his gang, was ordered on board; and, to my no finall grief, I was obliged to leave my school-master, whom I liked very much, and always attended while I stayed in London, to repair on board with my master. nor did I leave my kind patronesses, the Miss Guerins, without uneasiness and regret. They often used to teach me to read, and too great pains to instruct me in the principles of religion and the knowledge of God. I therefore parted from those amiable ladies with reluctance; after receiving from them many friendly cautions how to conduct myself, and some valuable presents.

When

When I came to Spithead, I found we were destined for the Mediterranean, with a large fleet, which was now ready to put to sea. We only wasted for the arrival of the admiral, who soon came on board; and about the beginning of the spring 1759, having weighed anchor and got under way, sailed for the Mediterranean; and in eleven days, from the Land's End, we got to Gibraltar. While we were here t used to be often on shore, and got various fruits in great plenty, and very cheap.

I had frequently told feveral people, in my excursions on shore, the story of my being kidnapped with my fifter, and of our being separated, as I have related before; and I had as often expressed my anxiety for her fate, and my forrow at having never met her again. One day, when I was on shore, and mentioning these circumstances to some persons, one of them told me he new where my fifter was, and, if : would accompany him, he would bring me to her. mprobable as this story was, I believed it immediately, agreed to go with him, while my heart leaped for joy; and, indeed, he condu ed me to a black young woman, who was so like my fister that at first fight I really thought it was her; but I was quickly undeceived; and, on talking talking to her, I found her to be of another ration.

While we lay here the Preston came in from the Levant. As foon as she arrived, my master told me I should now see my old companion Dick, who was gone in her when she failed for Turkey. I was much rejoiced at this news, and expeded every minute to embrace him; and when the captain came on board of our ship, which he did immediately after, I ran to enquire about my friend; but, with inexpressible forrow, I learned from the boat's crew that the dear youth was dead! and that they had brought his chest, and all his other things, to my master: these he afterwards gave to me, and I regarded them as a memorial of my friend, whom I loved and grieved for as a brother.

While we were at Gibralter I saw a soldier hanging by the heels at one of the moles*. I thought this a strange sight, as I had seen a man hanged in London by his neck. At another time I saw the master of a frigate towed to shore on a grating, by several of the men of war's boats, and discharged the sleet, which I understand was a mark of disgrace for cowardice. On board the same ship there was also a sailor hung up at the main-yard-arm.

- ardice.

^{*} He had drowned himself in endeavouring to desert

After lying at Gibralter for some time, we failed up the Mediterranean a considerable way above the gulf of Lyons: where we were one night overtaken with a terrible gale of wind, much greater than any I had ever yet experienced. The sea ran so high that, though all the guns were well housed, there was great reason to fear their getting loose, the ship rolled so much; and if they had it must have proved our destruction. After we had cruised here for a short time, we came to Barcelona, a Spanish sea-port, remarkable for its silk manufactories. Here the ships were all to be watered; and my master, who spoke different languages, and used often to interpret for the admiral, superintended the watering of ours. For that purpose he and the officers of the other ships, who were on the same service, had tents pitched in the bay; and the Spanish soldiers were stationed along the shore, I suppose to see that no depredations were committed by our men.

I used constantly to attend my master, and I was charmed with this place. All the time we stayed it was like a fair with the natives who brought us fruits of all kinds, and sold them to us much cheaper than I got them in England.

England. They used also to bring wine down to us in hog and sheep skins, which diverted me very much. The Spanish officers here treated our officers with great politeness and attention; and fome of them, in particular, used to come often to my master's tent tovisit him; where they would sometimes divert themselves by mounting me on the horses or mules, so that I could not fall, and fetting them off at full gallop; my imperfect skill in horsemanthip all the while affording them no small entertainment. After the ships we e watered, we returned to our old station of cruizing off Toulon, for the purpose of intercepting a fleet of French men of war that lay there. One Sunday, in our cruize, we came off a place where there were two small French frigateslying in shore; and our admiral, thin :ing to take or destroy them, sent two ships in after them -the Culloden and the Conqueror. They foon came up to the Frenchmen, and I faw a fmart fight here, both by sea and land: for the frigates were covered by batteries, and they played upon our ships most furiously, which they as furiously returned, and for a long time a constant firing was cept up on all sides at an amazing rate. At last one frigate fun; but the people escaped, though not without much difficulty: and a little after iome of the people left the other frigate also, which was a mere wreck. However, our ships did not venture to bring her away, they were so much annoyed from the batteries, which raked them both in going and coming; their top-masts were shot away, and they were otherwise so much shattered, that the admiral was obliged to send in many boats to tow them back to the sleet. I afterwards sailed with a man who sought in one of the French batteries during the engagement, and he told me our ships had done considerable mischief that day on thore, and in the batteries.

After this we failed for Gibralter, and arrived there about August 1759. Here we remained with all our fails unbent, while the sleet was watering and doing other necessary things. While we were in this situation, one day the admiral, with most of the principal officers, and many people of all stations, being on shore, about seven o'clock in the evening we were alarmed by signals from the frigates stationed for that purpose; and in an instant there was a general cry that the French sleet was out, and just passing through the streights. The admiral immediately came on board with some other officers; and it is impossible to describe the noise, hurry, and confusion, throughout the whole sleet, in bending their fails and flipping their cables; many people and ships boats were left on shore in the bustle. We had two captains on board of our ship, who came away in the hurry and left their ships to follow. We shewed lights from the gun-wales to the main-top-masthead; and all our lieutenants were employed amongst the fleet to tell the ships not to wait for their captains, but to put the sails to the yards, slip their cables, and sollow us; and in this confusion of making ready for sighting, we set out for sea in the dark after the French sleet. Here I could have exclaimed with Ajax,

"Oh Jove! O father! if it be thy will That we must perish, we thy will obey,

"But let us perish by the light of day."

They had got, the start of us so far that we were not able to come up with them during the night; but at day-light we saw seven fail of the line of battle some miles a-head. We immediately chased them till about sour o'clock in the evening, when our ships came up with them; and, though we were about sisteen large ships, our gallant admiral only sought them with his own division, which consisted of seven: so that we were just ship for ship. We passed by the whole of the enemy's sleet in

in order to come at their commander, Mont La Clue, who was in the Ocean, an eighty-four gun ship: as we passed they all fired on us; and at one time three of them fired together, continuing to do so for some time. Notwithstanding which our admiral would not suffer a gun to be fired at any of them, to my astonishment; but made us lie on our bellies on the deck till we came quite close to the Ocean, who was a-head of them all; when we had orders to pour the whole three tiers into her at once.

The engagement now commenced with great fury on both sides: the Ocean immediately returned our fire, and we continued engaged with each other for some time; during which I was frequently stunned with the thundering of the great guns, whose dreadful contents hurried many of my companions into awful eternity. At last the French line was entirely broken, and we obtained the victory, which was immediately proclaimed with loud huzzas and acclamations. We took three prizes, La Modeste, of sixty-four guns, and Le Temeraire and Centaur, of seventy-four guns each. The rest of the French ships took to flight with all the fail they could crowd. Our ship being very much damaged, and quite disabled from pursuing the enemy, the admiral miral immediately quitted her, and went in the broken and only boat we had left on board the Newark, with which, and some other ships, he went after the French. The Ocean, and another large French ship called the Redoutable, endeavouring to escape, ran ashore at Cape Logas, on the coast of Portugal; and the French admiral and some of the crew got ashore; but we, finding it impossible to get the ships off, set fire to them both. About midnight I saw the Ocean blow up, with a most dreadful explosion. I never beheld z more awful scene. About the space of a minute, the midnight feemed turned into day by the blaze, which was attended with a moife louder and more terrible than thunder, that seemed to rend every element around us.

My station during the engagement was on'the middle-deck. where I was quartered with another boy, to bring powder to the aftermost gun; and here I was witness of the dreadful fate of many of my companions, who, in the twinkling of an eye, were dashed in pieces, and launched into eternity. Happily I escaped undurt, though the shot and splitters slew thick about me during the whole sight. Towards the latter part of it my master was wounded, and I saw him carried down to the surgeon; but, though I was much alarmed for him, and wished to assist him, I dared not leave my post. At this station my gun-mate (a partner in bringing powder for the same gun) and I ran a very great risk for more than half an hour of blowing up the ship. For, when we had taken the cartridges out of the boxes, the bottoms of many of them proving rotten, the powder ran all about the deck, near the match tub: we scarcely had water enough at the last to throw on it. were also, from our employment, very much exposed to the enemy's shots; for we had to go through nearly the whole length of the ship to bring the powder. I expected therefore every minute to be my last; especially when I saw our men fall so thick about me; but, withing to guard as much against the dangers as possible, at first I thought it would be safest not to go for the powder till the Frenchmen had fired their broadfide; and then, while they were charging, I could go and come with my powder; but immediately afterwards I thought this caution was fruitless; and, cheering myself with the reflection that there was a time allotted for me to die as well as to be born, I instantly cast off all fear or thought whatever of death, and went through the whole of my duty with alacrity; pleasing myself with the hope, if I survived the battle, of relating it and the dangers I had escaped to the Miss Guerins, and others, when I should return to London.

Our ship suffered very much in this engagement; for, besides the number of our killed and wounded, she was almost torn to pieces, and our rigging fo much shattered, that our mizen-mast, main-yard, &c. hung over the fide of the ship; so that we were obliged to get many carpenters and others, from some of the ships of the fleet, to assist in fetting us in some tolerable order; and, not. withstanding which, it took us some time before we were completely refitted; after which we left Admiral Broderick to command, and we, with the prizes, steered for England. On the passage, and as soon as my master was fomething recovered of his wounds, the admiral appointed him captain of the Ætna fireship, on which he and I left the Namur, and went on board of her at sea. I liked this little ship very much. I now became the captain's steward; in which situation I was very happy, for was extremely well treated by all on board, and I had leifure to improve myself in reading and writing. The latter I had learned a little of before I left the Namur, as there was a school on board. When we arrived at Spithead, the Ætna went into Portsmouth harbour to resit, which being done, we returned to Spithead, and joined a large fleet that was thought to be intended against the Havannah; but about that time the king died; whether that prevented the expedition I know not; but it caused our ship to be stationed at Cowes, in the isle of Wight, till the beginning of the year sixty-one. Here I spent my time very pleasantly; I was much on shore all about this delightful island, and found the inhabitants very civil.

While I was here, I met with a trifling incident, which surprised me agreeably. I was one day in a field belonging to a geneleman who had a black boy about my own fize; this boy having observed me from his mafter's house, was transported at the fight of one of his own countrymen, and ran to meet me with the utmost haste. I not knowing what he was about, turned a little out of his way at first, but to no purpose: he soon came close to me, and caught hold of me in his arms as if I had been his brother, though we had never feen each other before. After we had talked together for some time, he took me to his mafter's house, where I was treated very kindly. This benevolent boy and I were very happy in frequently feeing each other, till about the E 2 month month of March 1761, when our ship had orders to sit out again for another expedition. When we got ready, we joined a very large sleet at Spithead, commanded by Commodore Keppel, which was destined against Belle-Isle; and, with a number of transport ships with troops on board, to make a descent on the place, we sailed once more in quest of same. I longed to engage in new adventures and see fresh wonders.

I had a mind on which every thing uncommon made its full impression, and every event which I considered as marvellous. Every extraordinary escape, or signal deliverance, either of myself or others, I looked upon to be effected by the interposition of Providence. We had not been above ten days at sea before an incident of this kind happened; which, whatever credit it may obtain from the reader, made no small impression on my mind.

We had on board a gunner, whose name was John Mondle, a man of very indifferent morals. This man's cabin was between the decks, exactly over where I lay, a-breast of the quarter-deck ladder. One night, the 5th of April, being terrified with a dream, he awoke in so great a fright that he could not rest in his bed any longer, nor even remain in his cabin; and he went upon deck about four four o'clock in the morning extremely agitated. He immediately told those on the deck of the agonies of his mind, and the dream which occasioned it: in which he said he had seen many things very awful, and had been warned by St Peter to repent, who told him time was short. This he said had greatly alarmed him, and he was determined to alter his life. People generally mock the fears of others when they are themselves in safety; and fome of his shipmates who heard him only laughed at him. However, he made a vow that he never would drink strong liquors again; and he immediately got a light, and gave away his fea-stores of liquor. which, his agitation still continuing, he began to read the Scriptures, hoping to find some relief; and foon afterwards he laid himself down again on his bed, and endeavoured to compose himself to sleep, but to no purpose; his mind still continuing in a state of agony. By this time it was exactly half after seven in the morning: I was then under the half-deck at the great cabin door; and at all once I heard the people in the want cry out, most fearfully—' The lord have mercy upon us! We are all lost! The Lord have mercy upon us?' Mr. Mondle hearing the cries. immediately ran, out of his cabin; and we were instantly struck by the Lynne, a fortygun ship, Captain Clark, which nearly ran us down. This ship had just put about, and was by the wind, but had not got full headway, or we must all have perished; for the wind was brisk. However, before Mondle had got four steps from his cabin door, she struck our ship with her cutwater, right in the middle of his bed and cabin, and ran it up to the combings of the quarter deck hatchway, and above three feet below water. and in a minute there was not a bit of wood to be seen where Mr Mondle's cabin stood: and he was so near being killed, that some of the splinters tore his face. As Mr. Mondle must inevitably have perished from this accident, had he not been alarmed in the very extraordinary way I have related, I could not help regarding this as an awful interpolition of Providence for his preservation. ships for some time swinged alongside of each other; for ours being a fireship, our grappling-irons caught the Lynne every way, and the yards and rigging went at an aftonishing rate. Our ship was in such a shocking condition that we all thought she would instantly go down, and every one ran for their lives, and got as well as they could on board the Lynne; but our lieutenant being the`

the aggressor, he never quitted the ship. However, when we found she did not fink immediately, the captain came on board again, and encouraged our people to return and try to fave her. Many of them came back, but some would not venture. Some of the ships in the fleet, feeing our situation, immediately fent their boats to our assistance, but it took us the whole day to fave the ship with all their help. And by using every posfible means, particularly frapping her toge-ther with many hawlers, and putting a great quantity of tallow below water where she was damaged, she was kept together; but it was well we did not meet with any gales of wind, or we must have gone to pieces; for we were in such a crazy condition that we had ships to attend us till we arrived at Belle-Isle, the place of our destination; and then we had all things taken out of the ship, and she was properly repaired. This escape of Mr. Mondle, which he, as well as myself, always confidered as a fingular act of Providence, I believe had a great influence on his life and conduct ever afterwards.

Now that I am on this subject, I beg leave to relate another instance or two which strongly raised my belief of the particular interposition of Heaven, and which might E 4 not not otherwise have found a place here, from their infignificance. I belonged for a few days, in the year 1758, to the Jason, of fiftyfour guns, at Plymouth; and one night, when I was on board, a woman, with a child at her breast, fell from the upper deck down into the hold, near the keel. Every one thought that the mother and child must be both dashed to pieces; but, to our great surprife, neither of them was hurt. I myself one day fell headlong from the upper deck of the Ætna down the after-hold, when the ballast was out; and all who saw me fall cried out I was killed: but I received not the least injury. And in the same ship a man fell from the mast-head on the deck without being hurt. In these, and in many more instances, I thought I could plainly trace the hand of God, without whose permission a sparrow cannot fall. I began to raise my fear from man to him alone, and to call daily on his holy name with fear and reverence: and I truit he heard my fupplications, and graciously condescended to answer me according to his holy word, and to implant the feeds of piety in me, even one of the meanest of his creatures.

When we had refitted our ship, and all things were in readiness for attacking the place.

place, the troops on board the transports were ordered to disembark; and my master, as a junior captain, had a share in the command of the landing. This was on the 12th of April. The French were drawn up on the shore, and had made every disposition to oppose the landing of our men, only a small part of them this day being able to effect it; most of them, after fighting with great bravery, were cut off; and General Crawford, with a number of others, were taken prisoners. In this day's engagement we had also our lieutenant killed.

On the 21st of April we renewed our efforts to land the men, while all the men of war were stationed along the shore to cover it, and fired at the French batteries and breastworks, from early in the morning till about four o'clock in the evening, when our foldiers effected a fafe landing. They immediately attacked the French; and, after a sharp encounter, forced them from the batteries. Before the enemy retreated, they blew up several of them, lest they should fall into our hands. Our men now proceeded to befiege the citadel, and my master was or-dered on shore to superintend the landing of all the materials necessary for carrying on the fiege; in which service I mostly attended Ες

him. While I was there I went about to different parts of the island; and one day, particularly, my curiofity almost cost me my life. I wanted very much to see the mode of charging the mortars, and letting off the shells, and for that purpose I went to an English battery that was but very few yards from the walls of the citadel. There, indeed, I had an opportunity of completely gratifying myfelf in feeing the whole operation, and that not without running a very great risk, both from the English shells that burst while I was there, but likewise from those of the French. One of the largest of their shells bursted within nine or ten yards of me: there was a fingle rock close by, about the fize of a butt; and I got instant shelter under it in time to avoid the fury of the shell. Where it burst the earth was torn in fuch a manner that two or three butts might eafily have gone into the hole it made, and it threw great quantities of stones and dirt to a considerable distance. Three shots were also fired at me, and another boy who was along with me, one of them in particular feemed

for, with a most dreadful found, it hissed close by

be me, and struck a rock at a little distance, which it shattered to pieces. When I saw what perilous circumstances I was in, I attempted to return the nearest way I could find, and thereby I got between the English and the French centinels: An English ferjeant, who commanded the outpofts, feeing me, and furprised how I came there (which was by stealth along the sea-shore), reprimanded me very severely for it, and instantly took the centinel off his post into custody, for his negligence in suffering me to pass the lines. While I was in this situation I obferved at a little distance a French horse, belonging to some islanders, which I thought I would now mount, for the greater expedition of getting off. Accordingly, I took some cord which I had about me, and making a kind of bridle of it, I put it round the horse's head, and the tame beaft very quietly suffered me to the him thus and mount him. As foon as I was on the horse's back I began. to kick and beat him, and my every means to make him go quick, but all to very little purpose : I could not drive him out of a flow While I was creeping along, still within reach of the enemy's shot, I met with a servant well mounted on an English horse. I immediately stopped; and, crying, told E 6 him him my case; and begged of him to help me, and this he effectually did; for; having a fine large whip, he began to lash my horse with it so severely, that he set off full speed with me towards the sea, while I was quite unable to hold or manage him. In this manner I went along till I came to a craggy precipice. I now could not stop my horse; and my mind was filled with apprehensions of my deplorable sate should he go down the precipice, which he appeared fully disposed to do: I therefore thought I had better throw myself off him at once, which I did immediately, with a great deal of dexterity, and fortunately escaped unburt. As soon as I found myself at liberty, I made the best of my way for the ship, determined I would not be so sool-hardy again in a hurry.

We continued to befiege the citadel till June, when it furrendered. During the fiege I have counted above fixty shells and carcafes in the air at once. When this place was taken I went through the citadel, and in the bomb-proofs under it, which were cut in the solid rock; and I thought it a surprising place, both for strength and building: notwithstanding which our shots and shells had made amazing devastation, and ruinous heaps all around it.

After

After the taking of this island, our ships with some others commanded by commodore Stanhope in the Swifture, went to Basse-road, where we blocked up a French fleet. Our ships were there from June till February following; and in that time I saw a great many scenes of war, and stratagems on both sides, to destroy each other's fleet. Sometimes we would attack the French with some ships of the line; at other times with boats; and frequently we made prizes. Once or twice the French attacked us by throwing shells with their bomb-vessels; and one day as a French vessel was throwing shells at our ships, she broke from her springs, behind the isle of Re: the tide being complicated, she came within a gun shot of the Nassau; but the Nassau could not bring a gun to bear upon her, and thereby the Frenchman got off. We were twice attacked by their fire-floats. which they chained together, and then let them float down with the tide; but each time we fent boats with grapplings, and towed them fafe out of the fleet.

We had different commanders while we were at this place, Commodores Stanhope, Dennis, Lord Howe, &c. From thence, before the Spanish war began, our ship and the Wasp sloop were sent to St. Sebastian in Spain, by Commodore Stanhope; and Commodore Dennis afterwards sent our ship as a cartel to Bayonne in France*, after which + we went in February 1762 to Belle-Isle, and there stayed till the summer, then we less it; and returned to Portsmouth.

After our ship was sitted out again for service, in September she went to Guernsey, where I was very glad to see my old hosters, who was now a widow, and my former little charming companion her daughter. I spent some time here very happily with them, till

- * Among others whom we brought from Bayonne, were two gentlemen, who had been in the West Indies, where they fold slaves; and they confessed they had made at one time a false bill of sale, and sold two Portuguese white men among a lot of slaves.
- f Some people have it, that sometimes shortly before persons die, their ward has been seen; that is, some spirit exactly in their likeness, though they are themselves at other places at the same time. One day while we were at Bayonne; Mr. Mondle saw one of our men, as he thought, in the gun-room; and a little after, coming on the quarer-deck, he spoke of the circumstances of this man to some of the officers. They told him that the man was then out of the ship, in one of the boats with the lieutenant; but Mr. Mondle would not believe it, and we searched the ship, when we found the man was actually out of her; and when the boat returned some time afterwards, we found the man had been drowned at the very time Mr. Mondle thought he saw him.

October, when we had orders to repair to Portsmouth. We parted from each other with a great deal of affection; and I promised to return soon, and see them again, not knowing what all-powerful fate had determined for me. Our ship having arrived at Portsmouth, we went into the habour, and remained there till the latter end of November, when we heard great talk about peace; and, to our very great joy, in the beginning of December we had orders to go up to London with our thip to be paid off. We received this news with loud hazzas, and every other demonstration of gladness; and nothing but mirth was to be seen throughout every part of the ship. I too was not without my share of the general joy on this occasion. I thought now of nothing but being freed, and working for myself, and thereby getting money to enable me to get a good education; for I always had a great defire to be able at least to read and write; and while I was on ship-board had endeavoured to improve myfelf in both. While I was in the Ætna particularly, the captain's clerk taught me to write, and gave me a smattering of arithmetic as far as the rule of three. was also one Daniel Queen, about forty years of age, a man very well educated, who messed with me on board this ship, and he likewise dressed and attended the captain. nately this man foon became very much attached to me, and took very great pains to instruct me in many things. He taught me to shave and dress hair a little, and also to read in the Bible, explaining many passages to me, which I did not comprehend. I was wonderfully furprifed to fee the laws and rules of my own country written almost exactly here; a circumstance which I believe tended to impress our manners and customs more deeply on my memory. I used to tell him of this resemblance; and many a time we had sat up the whole night together at this employment. In short, he was like a father to me; and some even used to call me after his name; they also styled me the black Christian. deed I almost loved him with the affection of Many things I have denied myself that he might have them; and when I used to play at marbles or any other game, and won a few halfpence, or got any little money, which I sometimes did, for shaving any one, I used to buy him a little sugar or tobacco, as far as my tock of money would go. used to say, that he and I never should part; and that when our ship was paid off, and I was as free as himself or any other man on board, he would instruct me in his business, by which I might gain a good livelihood. This gave me new life and spirits; and my heart burned within me, while I thought the time long till I obtained my freedom: for though my master had not promised it to me, yet besides the affurances I had received that he had no right to detain me, he always treated me with the greatest kindness, and reposed in me an unbounded confidence; he even paid attention to my morals; and would never fuffer me to deceive him, or tell lies, of which he used to tell me the consequences; and that if I did so God would not love me; so that from all this tenderness I had never once supposed, in all my dreams of freedom, that he would think of detaining me any longer than I wished.

In pursuance of our orders we failed from Portsmouth for the Thames, and arrived at Deptford the 10th of December, where we cast anchor just as it was high water. The ship was up about half an hour, when my master ordered the barge to be manned; and all in an instant, without having before given me the least reason to suspect any thing of the matter, he forced me into the barge, saying I was going to leave him, but he would take care I should not. I was so struck with the unexpectedness of this proceeding, that for some time I did not make a reply, only I made an offer to go for my books and cheft of clothes, but he swere I should not move out of his fight; and if I did he would cut my throat, at the same time taking his hanger. I began, however, to collect myself: and, plucking up courage, I told him I was free, and he could not by law ferve me fo. But this only enraged him the more; and he continued to swear, and said he would soon let me know whether he would or not, and at that instant sprung himself into the barge from the ship, to the astonishment and sorrow of all on board. The tide, rather unluckily for me, had just turned downward, so that we quickly fell down the river along with it, till we came among some outward-bound West Indiamen; for he was resolved to put me on board the first vessel he could get to receive The boat's crew, who pulled against their will, became quite faint at different times, and would have gone ashore; but he would not let them. Some of them strove then to cheer me, and told me he could not fell me, and that they would stand by the, which revived me alittle, and still entertained hopes; for as they pulled along he asked some vessels to receive me, and they would not. just as we had got a little below Gravesend, we came alonglide of a thip which was going away the next tide for the West Indies; her name was the Charming Sally, Capt. James Doran; and my mafter went on board and agreed with him for me; and in a little time I was fent for into the cabin. When I came there, Captain Doran asked me if I knew him? I answered that I did not; 'Then,' said he, ' you are now my flave.' I told him my master could not fell me to him, nor to any 'Why,' faid he, 'did not your one else. " master buy you?" I confessed he did. "But 'I have served him,' said I, 'many years, ' and he has taken all my wages and prizemoney, for I only got one fixpence during the war: besides this I have been baptized; and by the laws of the land no man has a right to fell me: And I added, that I had heard a lawyer and others at different times tell my master so. They both then said that those people who told me so were not my friends: but I replied—' It was very extraordinary that other people did not know the law as well as they.' Upon this Captain Doran fail I talked too much English; and if I did not behave myself well, and be quiet, he had a method on board to make me. was too well convinced of his power over me to doubt what he said: and my former sufferings in the flave ship presenting themselves to my mind, the recollection of them made me shudder. However, before I retired. I told them that as I could not get any right among men here, I hoped I should hereafter in Heaven; and I immediately left the cabin, filled with resentment and forrow. The only coat I had with me my master took away with him, and said, 'If your prize-money had been 10,000l. I had a right to it all, and would have taken it.' I had about nine guineas, which during my long sea-faring life, I had scraped together from trifling perquisites and little ventures; and I hid it that instant, lest my master should take that from me likewise, still hoping that by some means or other I should make my escare to the shore, and indeed some of my old shapmates told me not to despair, for they would get me back again; and that, as foon as they could get their pay, they would immediately come to Portsmouth to me, where this ship was going: but, alas! all my hopes were baffled, and the hour of my deliverance was as yet far off. My master, having foon concluded his bargain with the captain, came out of the cabin, and he and his people got into the boat, and püt put off; I followed them with aching eyes as long as I could, and when they were out of fight I threw myself on the deck, with a heart ready to burst with sorrow and anguish.

The author's reflections on his situation—Is decieved by a promise of being delivered—His despair at sailing for the West Indies—Arrives at Montservat, where he is sold to Mr. King—Various interesting instances of oppression, cruelty, and extortion, which the author saw practised upon the slaves in the West Indies during his captivity, from the year 1763 to 1766—Address on it to the planters.

Thus, at the moment I expected all my toils to end, was I plunged, as I supposed, in a new slavery; in comparison of which all my service hitherto had been perfect freedom; and whose horrors, always present to my mind, now rushed on it with tenfold aggravation. I wept very bitterly for some time: and began to think that I must have done done fomething to displease the Lord, that he thus punished me so severely. This filled me with painful reflections on my past conduct; I recollected that on the morning of our arrival at Deptford I had rashly sworn that as foon as we reached London I would fpend the day in rambling and sport. My conscience fmote me for this unguarded expression: I felt that the Lord was able to disappoint me in all things, and immediately confidered my present situation as a judgment of Heaven on account of my presumption in swearing: I therefore, with contrition of heart, acknowledged my transgression to God, and poured out my foul before him with unfeigned repentance, and with earnest supplications I befought him not to abandon me in my distress, nor cast me from his mercy for ever. little time my grief, spent with its own violence, began to subside; and after the first confusion of my thoughts was over, I reflected with more calmness on my present condition: I confidered that trials and disappointments are sometimes for our good, and I thought God might perhaps have permitted this in order to teach me wisdom and resignation; for he had hitherto shadowed me with the wings of his mercy, and by his invisible but powerful hand brought me the way I knew not.

not. These restections gave me a little comfort, and I arose at last from the deck with dejection and sorrow in my countenance, yet mixed with some saint hope that the Lord would appear for my deliverance.

Soon afterwards as my new master was going on shore, he called me to him, and told me to behave myself well, and do the business of the ship the same as any of the rest of the boys, and that I should fare the better for it; but I made him no answer. was then asked if I could swim, and I said, No. However I was made to go under the deck; and was well watched. The next tide the ship got under way; and soon after arrived at the Mother Bank, Portsmouth; where she waited a few days for some of the West India convoy. While was here tried every means I could devise among the people of the ship to get me a boat from the shore, as there was none suffered to come along the side of the ship; and their own, whenever it was used, was hoisted in again immediately. A sailor on board took a guinea from me on pretence of getting meaboat; and promised me, time after time, that it was hourly to come off. he had the watch upon deck a watched also; and looked long enough, but all in vain; I could never see either the boat or my guinea again.

again. And what I thought was still the worst of all, the fellow gave information, as I afterwards found, all the while to the mates of my intention to go off, if I could in any way do it; but, rogue-like, he never told them he had got a guinea from me to procure my escape. However, after we had sailed, and his trick was made known to the ship's crew, I had fome satisfaction in seeing him detested and despised by them all for his behaviour to me. I was still in hopes that my old ship mates would not forget their promise to come for me at Porsmouth: and they did. at last, but not till the day before we sailed, fome of them did come there, and fent me off some oranges, and other tokens of their regard. They also sent me word they would come off to me themselves the next day or the day after; and a lady also, who lived in Gosport, wrote to me that she would come and take me out of the ship at the same time. This lady had been once very intimate with my former master; I used to sell and take care of a great deal of property for her in different ships; and in return she always shewed great friendship for me, and used to tell my master that she would take me away to live with her: but unfortunately for me, a disagreement foon afterwards took place between them; and

and the was succeeded in my master's good graces by another lady, who appeared sole mistress of the Ætna, and mostly lodged on board. I was not so great a favourite with this Lady as with the former; she had conceived a pique against me on some occasion when she was on board, and she did not fail to instigate my master to treat me in the manner he did *

However, the next morning, the 30th of December, the wind being brisk and easterly, the Æolus frigate, which was to escort the convoy, made a fignal for failing. All the ships then got up their anchors; and, before any of my friends had an opportunity to come off to my relief, to my inexpressible anguish our ship had got under way. What tumultuous emotions agitated my soul when the convoy got under sail, and I, a prisoner on board, now without hope? I kept my swimming eyes upon the land in a state of unutterable grief; not

^{*} Thus was I facrificed to the envy and referement of this woman, for knowing that the lady whom she had succeeded in my master's good graces designed to take me into her service; which, had I once got on shore, she would not have been able to prevent. She selt her pride alarmed at the superiority of her rival in being attended by a black servant: it was not less to prevent this than to be revenged on me, that she caused the captain to treat me thus cruelly.

The turbulence of my emotions, however, naturally gave way to calmer thoughts, and I foon perceived what fate had decreed no mortal on earth could prevent. The convoy failed on without any accident, with a pleasant gale and smooth sea, for six weeks, till February, when one morning the Æolus ran down a brig, one of the convoy, and she instantly went down and was ingulfed in the dark recesses of the ocean. The convoy was immediately thrown into great confusion till it was day-light; and the Æolus was illuminated with lights to prevent any farther mischies. On the 13th of February 1763, from the mast-head, we described our destined island Montserrat, and soon after I beheld those

At the fight of this land of bondage, a fresh horror ran through all my frame, and chilled me to the heart. My former slavery now rose in dreadful review to my mind, and displayed elegant and pathetic little poem was occasioned, as appears by the advertisement prefixed to it, by the following incident: "A black who, a few days before had ran away from his master, and got himself christened, with intent to marry a white woman, his fellow-fervant, being taken, and sent on board a ship in the Thames, took an opportunity of shooting himself through the head."

nothing but misery, stripes, and chains; and, in the first paroxysm of my grief, I called upon God's thunder, and his avenging power, to direct the stroke of death to me, rather than permit me to become a slave, and to be foldsfrom lord to lord.

In this state of my mind our ship came to an anchor, and soon after discharged her cargo. I now knew what it was to work hard; I was made to help to unload and load the ship. And, to comfort me in my distress in that time, two of the sailors robbed me of all my money, and ran away from the ship. I had been so long used to an European climate, that at first I selt the scorching West India sun very painful, while the dashing surf would toss the boat and the people in it frequently above high-water mark. Sometimes our limbs were broken with this, or even attended with instant death, and I was day by day mangled and torn.

About the middle of May, when the ship was got ready to sail for England, I all the time believing that Fate's blackest clouds were gathering over my head, and expecting their burstieg would mix me with the dead, Captain Doran sent for me ashore one morning, and I was told by the messenger that my sate was then determined. With trembling steps and sluttering fluttering heart I came to the captain, and found with him one Mr. Robert King, a quaker, and the first merchant in the place. The captain then told me my former master had fent me there to be fold: but that he had defired him to get me the best master he could, as he told him I was a very deferving boy, which Captain Doran faid he found to be true, and if he were to stay in the West Indies, he would be glad to keep me himself; but he could not venture to take me to London, for he was very fure that when I came there I would leave him. I at that instant burst out a crying, and begged much of him to take me to England with him, but all to no purpose. He told me he had got me the very best mafter in the whole island, with whom I should be as happy as if I were in England, and for that reason he chose to let him have me, though he could fell me to his own brother-in-law for a great deal more money than what he got from this gentleman. Mr. King, my new mafter, then made a reply, and faid, the reason he had bought me was on account of my good character; and, as he had not the least doubt of my good behaviour, I should be very well off with him. He also told me he did not live in the West Indies, but at Philadelphia, where he was going foon; and, as I understood some-F 3 thing thing of the rules of arithmetic, when we got there he would put me to school, and fit me for a clerk. This conversation relieved my mind a little, and I left those gentlemen considerably more at ease in myself than when I came to them; and I was very thankful to Captain Doran, and even to my old master, for the character they had given me; a character which I afterwards found of infinite fervice to me. I went on board again, and took leave of all my shipmates; and the next day the ship sailed. When she weighed anchor I went to the waterfide and looked at her, with a very wishful and aching heart, and followed her with my eyes until she was totally out of fight. I was so bowed down with grief that I could not hold up my head for many months; and if my new master had not been kind to me, I believe I should have died under it at last. And indeed I soon found that he fully deserved the good character which Captain Doran had given me of him; for he pos-fessed a most amiable disposition and temper, and was very charitable and humane. of his slaves behaved amiss, he did not beat or use them ill, but parted with them. This made them afraid of disobliging him; and as he treated his flaves better than any other man on the island, so he was better and more faithfully served by them in return. By this kind treatment I did at last endeavour to compose myfelf; and with fortitude, though moneyles, determined to face whatever fate had decree'd for me. Mr. King foon afked me what I could do: and at the same time said he did not mean to treat me as a common flave. I told him I knew fomething of feamanship, and could shave and dress hair pretty well; and I could refine wines, which I had learned on shipboard, where I had often done it; and that I could write, and understood arithmetic tolerably well as far as the Rule of Three. He then asked me if I knew any thing of gauging; and, on my answering that I did not, he said one of his clerks should teach me to gauge.

Mr. King dealt in all manner of merchandize, and kept from one to fix clerks. He loaded many veffels in a year; particularly to Philadelphia, where he was born, and was connected with a great mercantile house in that city. He had besides many vessels and doggers of different sizes, which used to go about the island and others to collect rum, sugar, and other goods. I understood pulling and managing those boats very well; and this hard work, which was the first that he set me to, in the sugar seasons, used to be my constant employment. I have rowed the boat, and flaved at the oars, from one hour to fixteen in the twenty-four; during which I had fifteen pence sterling per day to live on, though sometimes only ten pence. However, this was confiderably more than was allowed to other flaves that used to work often with me, and belonged to other gentlemen on the island: these poor souls had never more than ninepence a day, and feldom more than fix-pence. from their masters or owners, though they carned them three or four pisterines *: for it is a common practice in the West Indies, for men to purchase flaves though they have not plantations themselves, in order to let them out to planters and merchants at fo much a-piece by the day, and they give what allowance they choose out of this produce of their daily work to their flaves for fubfistence; this allowance is often very fcanty. My mafter often gave the owners of these slaves two and a half of these pieces per day, and found the poor fellows in victuals himself, because he thought their owners did not feed them well enough according to the work they did. The flaves used to like this very well, and as they knew my master to be a man of feeling, they were always glad to work for him in preference to any other gentleman; some of whom, after they had been paid for these poor people's labours, would not give them their allowance out of it. Many times have I feen these unfortunate wretches beaten for asking for their pay; and often severely flogged by their owners if they did not bring them their daily or weekly money exactly to the time; though the poor creatures were obliged to wait on the gentlemen they had worked for, sometimes more than half the day, before they could get their pay; and this generally on Sundays, when they wanted the time for themselves. In particular, I knew a countryman of mine, who once did not bring the weekly money directly that it was earned; and though he brought it the same day to his mafter, yet he was staked to the ground for his pretended negligence, and was just going to receive a hundred lashes, but for a gentleman who begged him off fifty. This poor man was very industrious, and by his frugality had saved fo much money, by working on shipboard, that he had got a white man to buy him a boat, unknown to his master. Some time after he had this little estate, the governor wanted a boat to bring his fugar from different parts of the island; and, knowing this to be a negroman's boat, he seized upon it for himself, and would not pay the owner a farthing. The man on this went to his master, and complained to him of this act of the governor; but the only fatisfaction he received was to be damned very heartily by his master, who asked him how dared any of his negroes to have a boat. If the justly-merited ruin of the governor's fortune could be any gratification to the poor man he had thus robbed, he was not without consolation. Extortion and rapine are poor providers; and some time after this the governor died in the King's Bench in England, as I was told, in great poverty. The last war favoured this poor negro-man, and he found fome means to escape from his Christian master: he came to England, where I saw him afterwards feveral times. Such treatment as this often drives these miserable wretches to despair, and they run away from their masters at the hazard of their lives. Many of them, in this place, unable to get their pay when they have earned it, and fearing to be flogged, as usual, if they return home with-out it, run away where they can for shelter, and a reward is often offered to bring them in dead or alive. My master used sometimes, in these cases, to agree with their owners, and to settle with them himself; and thereby he faved many of them a flogging.

Once, for a few days, I was let out to fit

a veffel, and I had no victuals allowed me by either party; at last I told my master of this treatment, and he took me away from it. In many of the estates, on the different islands where I used to be fent for rum or sugar, they would not deliver it to me, or any other negro; he was therefore obliged to fend a white man along with me to those places; and then he used to pay him from fix to ten pisterines a-day. From being thus employed, during the time I ferved Mr. King, in going about the different estates on the island, I had all the opportunity I could wish for, to see the dreadful usage of the poor men; usage that reconciled me to my situation, and made me bless God for the hands into which I had fallen.

I had the good fortune to please my master in every department in which he employed me; and there was scarcely any part of his business, or household affairs, in which I was not occasionally engaged. I often supplied the place of a clerk, in receiving and delivering cargoes to the ships, in tending stores, and delivering goods: and, besides this, I used to shave and dress my master when convenient, and take care of his horse; and when it was necessary, which was very often, I worked likewise on board of different vessels of his. By these means I became very useful to my master, and saved him, as he used to acknowledge, about a hundred pounds a-year. Nor did he scruple to say I was of more advantage to him than any of his clerks; though their usual wages in the West Indies are from fixty to a hundred pounds current a-year.

I have fometimes heard it afferted, that a negro cannot earn his master the first cost; but nothing can be further from the truth. suppose nine-tenths of the mechanics throughout the West Indies are negro slaves; and I well know the coopers among them earn two dollars a-day; the carpenters the same, and oftentimes more; as also the masons, smiths, and fishermen, &c. and I have known many flaves whose masters would not take a thou fand pounds current for them. But furely this affertion refutes itself; for, if it be true, why do the planters and merchants pay fuch a price for flaves? And, above all, why do those who make this affertion exclaim the most loudly against the abolition of the slave trade? So much are we blinded, and to fuch inconfistent arguments are they driven by mistaken interest! I grant, indeed, that slaves are sometimes, by half-feeding, half-clothing, overworking, and stripes, reduced so low, that they are turned out as unfit for service, and left to perish perish in the woods or expire on a dunghill.

My master was several times offered by different gentlemen one hundred guineas for me; but he always told them he would not sell me, to my great joy; and I used to double my diligence and care for fear of getting into the hands of those men who did not allow a valuable slave the common support of life. Many of them even used to find sault with my master for feeding his slaves so well as he did; although I often went hungry, and an Englishman might think my fare very indifferent; but he used to tell them he always would do it, because the slaves thereby looked better and did more work.

While I was thus employed by my mafter, I was often a witness to cruelties of every kind which were exercised on my unhappy sellow flaves. I used frequently to have different cargoes of new negroes in my care for sale; and it was almost a constant practice with our clerks, and other whites, to commit violent depredations on the chastity of the female slaves; and these I was, though with reluctance, obliged to submit to at all times, being unable to help them. When we have had some of these slaves on board my master's vessels to carry them to other islands, or to America,

America, I have known our mates to commit these acts most shamefully, to the disgrace, not of Christians only, but of men. I have even known them gratify their brutal passion with females not ten years old; and these abominations some of them practised to such scandalous excess, that one of our captains discharged the mate and others on that account. And yet in Montserrat I have seen a negro-man Itaked to the ground, and cut most shockingly, and then his ears cut off bit by bit, because he had been connected with a white woman who was a common profitute: as if it were no crime in the whites to rob an innocent African girl of her virtue; but most heinous in a black man only to gratify a paffion of nature, where the temptation was offered by one of a different colour, though the most abandoned woman of her species.

One Mr. D— told me that he had fold 41,000 negroes, and that he once cut of a negro-man's leg for running away—I asked him, if the man had died in the operation, how he as a Christian could answer for the horrid act before God? and he told me, answering was a thing of another world; what he thought and did were policy. I told him that the Christian doctrine taught us to do unto others as we would that others should do unto us.

us. He then faid that his scheme had the desired effect—it cured that man and some others of running away.

Another negro-man was half hanged, and then burnt, for attempting to poison a cruel Thus by repeated cruelties are the first urged to despair, and then murdered, because they still retain so much of human nature about them as to wish to put an end to their misery, and retaliate on their tyrants! These overseers are indeed for the most part persons of the worst character of any denomination of men in the West Indies. Unfortunately, many humane gentlemen, by not residing on their estates, are obliged to leave the management of them in the hands of these human butchers, who cut and mangle the flaves in a shocking manner on the most trifling occasions, and altogether treat them in every respect like brutes. They pay no regard to the situation of pregnant women, nor the least attention to the lodging of the field negroes. Their huts, which ought to be well covered, and the place dry where they take their little repose, are often open sheds, built in damp places; so that, when the poor creatures return tired from the toils of the field, they contract many disorders, from being exposed to the damp air in this uncomfortable comfortable state, while they are heated, and their pores are open. This neglect certainly conspires with many others to cause a decrease in the births as well as in the lives of the grown negroes. I can quote many instances of gentlemen who reside on their estates in the West Indies and then the scene is quite changed; the negroes are treated with lenity and proper care, by which their lives are prolonged, and their masters profited. To the honour of humanity, I knew several gentlemen who managed their estates in this manner; and they found that benevolence was their true interest. And, among many I could mention in feveral of the islands, knew one in Montserrat * whose slaves looked remarkably well, and never needed any fresh supplies of negroes; and there are many other estates, especially in Barbadoes, which, from fuch judicious treatment, need no fresh stock of negroes at any time. I have the honour of knowing a most worthy and humane gentleman, who is a native of Barbadoes, and has estates there t. This gentleman has written a treatise on the usage of his own slaves. He allows them two hours for refreshment at mid-day, and many other indulgences and comforts, particularly in their lying; and, besides this, he raises more provisions on his estate then they can destroy; so that by these attentions he faves the lives of his negroes, and keeps them healthy, and as happy as the condition of flavery can admit. I myself, as shall appear in the sequel, managed an estate, where, by those attentions, the negroes were uncommonly cheerful and healthy, and did more work by half than by the common mode of treatment they usually do. For want, therefore, of fuch care and attention to the poor negroes, and otherwise oppressed as they are, it is no wonder that the decrease should require 20,000 new negroes annually to fill up the vacant places of the dead.

hven in Barbadoes, notwithstanding those humane exceptions which I have mentioned, and others I am acquainted with, which justly make it quoted as a place where slaves meet with the best treatment, and need sewest recruits of any in the West Indies, yet this island requires 1000 negroes annually to keep up the original stock, which is only 80,000. So that the whole term of a negro's life may be said to be there but sixteen years *! and yet the climate here in every respect the same as that from which they are taken, except in being

being more wholesome. Do the British colonies decrease in this manner? And vet what a prodigious difference is there between an English and West India climate?

While I was in Montterrat I knew a negroman, named Emanuel Sankey, who endeavoured to escape from his miserable bondage, by concealing himself on board of a London ship: But fate did not favour the poor oppressed man; for, being discovered when the vessel was under fail, he was delivered up again to his master. This Christian master immediately pinned the wretch down to the ground at each wrist and ankle, and then took some sticks of sealing wax, and lighted them, and dropped it all over his back. There was another mafter who was noted for cruelty; and I believe he had not a flave but what had been cut, and had pieces fairly taken out of the flesh: and after they had been punished thus, he used to make them get into a long wooden. box or case he had for that purpose, in which he shut them up during pleasure. It was just about the height and breadth of a man; and the poor wretches had no room when in the case to move.

It was very common in several of the islands, particularly in St. Kitt's, for the slaves to be branded with the initial letters of their master's name, and a load of heavy iron hooks hung about about their necks. Indeed, on the most trisling occasions they were loaded with chains, and often other instruments of torture were added. The iron muzzle, thumb-screws, &c. are so well known as not to need a description, and were sometimes applied for the slightest faults. have feen a negro beaten till some of his bones were broken, for only letting a pot boil over. It is not uncommon after a flogging to make flaves go on their knees and thank their owners, and pray, or rather fay God bless them. I have often asked many of the men slaves (who used to go several miles to their wives, and late in the night, after having been wearied with a hard day's labour) why they went fo far for wives, and why they did not take them of their own master's negro women, and particularly those who lived together as household slaves? Their answers have ever been-" Because when the master or mistress choose to punish the women, they make the husbands flog their own wives, and that they could not bear to do." Is it furprifing that usage like this should drive the poor creatures to despair, and make them seek a refuge in death from those evils which render their lives intolerable—while

" No rest!"

This

With shudd'ring horror pale, and eyes aghast,
They view their lamentable lot, and find

This they frequently do. A negro-man on board a vessel of my master, while I belonged to her, having been put in irons for some trissing misdemeanor, and kept in that state for some days, being weary of life, took an opportunity of jumping overboard into the sea; however, he was picked up without being drowned. Another, whose life was also a burden to him, resolved to starve himself to death, and resuled to eat any victuals: this procured him a severe slogging; and he also, on the first occasion which offered, jumped overboard at Charles Town, but was faved.

Nor is there any greater regard shewn to the little property than there is to the persons and lives of the negroes. I have already related an instance or two of particular oppression out of many which I have witnessed; but the following is frequent in all the islands. The wretched sield slaves, after toiling all the day for an unseeling owner, who gives them but little victuals, steal sometimes a few moments from rest or refreshment to gather some small portion of grais, according as their time will admit. This they commonly tie up in a parcel; either a bit's worth (fix pence) or half a bit's worth; and bring it to town, or to the market to sell. Nothing is more common than for the white people on this occa-

son to take the grass from them without pay-ing for it; and not only so, but too often alfo to my knowledge, our clerks, and many others, at the same time, have committed acts of violence on the poor, wretched, and helpless females, whom I have seen for hours stand crying to no purpose, and get no redress or pay of any kind. Is not this one common and crying fin enough to bring down God's judgment on the islands? He tests us the oppreflor and the oppressed are both in hands; and if these are not the poor, the broken hearted, the blind, the captive, the bruised which our Saviour speaks of, who are they? One of these depredators once, in St. Eustaria, came on board of our vessel, and bought some fowls and pigs of me; and a whole day after his departure with the things, he returned again, and wanted his money back: I refused to give it; and, not seeing my captain on board, he began the common pranks with me; and fwore he would even break open my cheft and take my money. I there-fore expected, as my captain was absent, that he would be as good as his word; and he was just proceeding to strike me, when fortunately a British seaman on board, whose heart had not been debauched by a West India climate, interposed and prevented him. But had the cruel cruel man struck me I certainly should have desended myself at the hazard of my life; for what is life to a man thus oppressed? He went away, however, swearing; and threatened that whenever he caught me on shore he would shoot me, and pay for me afterwards.

The small account in which the life of a negro is held in the West Indies, is so univerfally known, that it might feem impertinent to quote the following extract, if some people had not been hardy enough of late to affert that negroes are on the same footing in that respect as Europeans. By the 329th Act, page 125, of the Assembly of Barbadoes, it is enacted, 'That if any negro, or other flave, under punishment by his master, or his order, for running away, or any other crime or misdemeanor towards his said master, unfortunately shall suffer in life or member, no person whatsoever shall be liable to a fine: but if any man shall out of wantonness, or only of bloody-mindedness, or cruel intention, wilfully kill a negro, or other slave, of bis own, he shall pay into the public treasury fifteen opounds sterling.' And it is the same in most, if not all, of the West India islands. Is not this one of the many acts of the island, which call loudly for redress? And do not the Affembly which enacted it deserve the appellation lation of savages and brutes rather than of Christians and men? It is an act at once unmerciful, unjust, and unwise; which for cruelty would disgrace an assembly of those who are called barbarians; and for its injustice and insanity would shock the morality and common sense of a Samiade or Hottentot.

Shocking as this and many other acts of the bloody West India code at first view appear, how is the iniquity of it heightened when we confider to whom it may be extended; Mr. James Tobin, a zealous labourer in the vineyard of flavery, gives an account * of a French planter of his acquaintance, in the island of Martinico, who shewed him many Mulattoes working in the fields like beafts of burden; and he told Mr. Tobin these were all the produce of his own loins! And I myself have known similar instances. Pray, reader, are these sons and daughters of the French planter less his children by being begotten on black women! And what must be the virtue of those legislators, and the feelings of those fathers. who estimate the lives of their sons, however begotten, at no more than fifteen pounds, though they should be murdered, as the act favs, out of wantonness and bloody-mindedness! But is not the flave trade entirely a war with the heart of man? And furely that which is begun by breaking down the barriers of virtue, involves in its continuance destruction to every principle, and buries all fentiments in ruin!

I have often seen flaves, particularly those who were meagre, in different islands, put into scales and weighed; and then fold from threepence to fixpence or ninepence a pound. My master, however, whose humanity was shocked at this mode, used to fell such by the lump. And at or after a fale, even those negroes born in the islands it is not uncommon to see taken from their wives, wives taken from their husbands, and children from their parents, and fent off to other islands, and wherever else their merciles lords choose: and probably never more during life fee each other! Oftentimes my heart has bled at these partings; when the friends of the departed have been at the water side, and, with sighs and tears, have kept their eyes fixed on the vessel till it went out of fight.

A poor Creole negro I knew well, who, after having been often thus transported from island to island, at last resided at Montserrat. This man used to tell me many melancholy tales of himself. Generally, after he nad done working for his master he used to employ his few lessure moments to go a-fishing. When he had caught any fish, his master would frequently take them from him without paying him; and at other times some other white people would ferve him in the fame manner. One day he faid to me, very movingly, Sometimes when a white man take away my fish I go to my maser, and he get me 'my right; and when my mafer by strength take away my fishes, what me must do? I can't go to any body to be righted; then,' faid the poor man, looking up above, 'I must 'look up to God Mighty in the top for ' right.' This artless tale moved me much, and I could not help feeling the just cause Moses had in redressing his brother against the Egyptian. I exhorted the man to look up still to the God on the top, since there was no redress below. Though I little thought then that I myself should more than once experience fuch imposition, and need the same exhortation hereafter, in my own transactions in the islands; and that even this poor man and I should some time after suffer together in the same manner, as shall be related hereafter.

Nor was such usage as this confined to particular places or individuals; for in all the different islands in which I have been (and I have have visited no less than fifteen) the treatment of the flaves was nearly the same; so mearly indeed, that the history of an island, or even a plantation, with a few fuch exceptions as I have mentioned, might serve for a history of the whole. Such a tendency has the flave-trade to debauch men's minds, and harden them to every feeling of humanity! For I will not suppose that the dealers in flaves are born worse than other men-No; it is the fatality of this mistaken avarice that it corrupts the milk of human kindness and turns it into gall. And, had the pursuits of those men been different, they might have been as generous, as tender-hearted, and just as they are unfeeling, rapacious, and cruel. Surely this traffic cannot be good, spreads like a pestilence, and taints what it touches! which violates that first natural right of mankind, equality and independency, and gives one man a dominion over his fellows which God could never intend! For it raifes the owner to a state as far above man as it depresses the slave below it; and, with all the presumption of human pride, sets a distinction between them, immeasurable in extent, and endless in duration! Yet how mistaken is the avarice even of the planters? Are flaves flaves more useful by being thus humbled to the condition of brutes, than they would be if suffered to enjoy the privileges of men? The freedom which diffuses health and prosperity throughout Britain answers you-No. When you make men flaves you deprive them of half their virtue, you fet them in your own conduct an example of fraud, rapine, and cruelty, and compel them to live with you in a state of war; and yet you complain that they are not honest or faithful! You stupify them with stripes, and think it necessary to keep them in a state of ignorance; and yet you affert that they are incapable of learning; that their minds are such a barren soil or moor, that culture would be loft on them; and that they come from a climate, where nature (though prodigal of her bounties in a degree unknown to yourselves) has left man alone scant and unfinished, and incapable of enjoying the treasures she had poured out for him!-An affertion at once impious and abfurd. Why do you use those instruments of torture? Are they fit to be applied by one rational being to another? And are you not struck with shame and mortification, to see the partakers of your nature reduced fo low? But, above all, are there no dangers attending this mode of treatment? Are you not hourly G. 2 in in dread of an infurrection? Nor would it be furprifing: for when

In the preceding chapter I have set before the reader a sew of those many instances of oppression, extortion, and cruelty, which I have been a witness to in the West Indies; but, were I to enumerate them all, the catalogue would be tedious and disgusting. The punishments of the slaves on every trisling occasion are so frequent, and so well known, together with the different instruments with which they are tortured, that it cannot any longer afford novelty to recite them; and they are too shocking to yield delight either to the writer or the reader. I shall therefore hereafter only mention such as incidently besel myself in the course of my adventures.

In the variety of departments in which I was employed by my master, I had an opportunity of feeing many curious scenes in different islands; but, above all, I was struck with a celebrated curiofity called Brimstone-Hill, which is a high and steep mountain, some few miles from the town of Plymouth n Montserrat. I had often heard of some, wonders that were to be feen on this hill, and I went once with fome white and black people to visit it. When we arrived at the top, I saw under different cliss great flakes of brimstone, occasioned by the steams of various little ponds, which were then boiling naturally in the earth. Some of these ponds were as white as milk, fome quite blue, and many others of different colours. I had taken some potatoes with me and I put them into different ponds, and in a few minutes they were well boiled. I tasted some of them, but they were very fulphurous; and the filver shoe buckles, and all the other things of that metal we had among us, were in a little time turned as black as lead.

Whilst I was in the island, one night I felt a strange

a strange sensation, viz. I was told that the house where I lived was haunted by spirits? And once, at midnight, as I was fleeping on a large cheft, I felt the whole building shake in an uncommon and aftonishing manner; for much so, that it shook me off the chest where I then lay. I was exceedingly frightened, and thought it was indeed the visitation of the It threw me into fuch a tremor as is not to be described. I instantly covered my head all over as I lay, and did not know what to think or do; and in this consternation, a gentleman who lay in the next room just by me came out, and I was glad to hear him, and made a sham cough, and he asked me if I felt the earthquake. I told him I was shook off the chest where I lay, but did not know what occasioned it; and he told me it was an earthquake, and shook him out of his At hearing this I became easy in my mind.

At another time a circumstance of this kind happened, when I was on board of a vessel at Montserrat-road, at midnight, as we were asseep, and it shook the vessel in the most unaccountable manner imaginable, and to me it seemed as when a vessel or a boat runs on gravel, as near as I can describe it. Many things on board were moved out of their places, but happily no damage was done.

About

About the end of the year 1763, kind Providence seemed to appear rather more favourable to me. One of my master's vessels, a Bermudas floop, about fixty tons burthen, was commanded by one Captain Thomas Farmer, an Englishman, a very alert and active man, who gained my master a great deal of money by his good management in carrying paftengers from one island to another; but very often his failors used to get drunk, and run away with the veffel's boat, which hindered him in his business very much. This man had taken a liking to me; and many different times begged of my master to let me go a trip with him as a failor: but he would tell him he could not spare me, though the vessel sometimes could not go for want of hands, for failors were generally very scarce in the island. However, at last, from necessity or force, my master was prevailed on, though very reluctantly, to let me go with this captain; but he gave him great charge to take care that I did not run away; for if I did, he would make him pay for me. This being the case, the captain had for some time a sharp eye upon me whenever the veffel anchored: and as foon as she returned I was sent for on shore again. Thus was I slaving, as it were, for life, sometimes at one thing, and sometimes at another; so that the captain and I were nearly the most useful men in my master's employment. I also became so useful to the captain on shipboard, that many times, when he used to ask me for to go with him, though it should be but for twenty-four hours to some of the islands near us, my master would answer he could not spare me; at which the captain would swear, and would not go the trip, and tell my master I was better to him on board than any three white men he had; for they used to behave ill in many respects, particularly in getting drunk, and then frequently got the boat stove, so as to hinder the vessel from coming back so soon as she might have done. This my master knew very well; and, at last, by the captain's constant entreaties, after I had been several times with him, one day, to my great joy, told me the captain would not let him rest, and asked whether I would go aboard as a failor, or stay on shore and mind the stores, for he could not bear any longer to be plagued in this manner. I was very happy at this proposal, for I immediately thought I might in time stand some chance by being on board to get a little money, or possibly make my escape if I should be used ill: I also expected to get better food, and in greater abundance; for I had oftentimes felt much hunger, though $G \cdot 5$

my master treated his slaves, as I have obferved, uncommonly well; I therefore, without hesitation, answered him, that I would go and be a failor if he pleased. Accordingly I was ordered on board directly. Nevertheless. between the vessel and the shore, when she was in port, I had little or no rest, as my master always wished to have me along with him. Indeed he was a very pleasant gentleman, and but for my expectations on shipboard I should not have thought of leaving him. But the captain liked me also very much, and I was entirely his right-hand man. I did all I could to deferve his favour, and in return I received better treatment from him than any other I believe ever met with in the West Indies in my fituatioin.

After I had been failing for some time with this captain, I at length endeavoured to try my luck, and commence merchant. I had but a very small capital to begin with; for one single half bit, which is equal to three pence in England, made up my whole stock. However, I trusted to the Lord to be with me; and at one of our trips to St. Eustatia, a Dutch island, I bought a glass tumbler with my half bit, and when I came to Montserrat I sold it for a bit, or fix-pence, Luckily we made several successive trips to St. Eustatia (which was a general mart for the West Indies, about: twenty leagues from Montserrat), and in our next, finding my tumbler fo profitable, with this one bit I bought two tumblers more; and when I came back I fold them for two bits. equal to a shilling sterling. When we went again, I bought with these two bits four more of thele glaffes, which I fold for four bits on our return to Montserrat; and in our next voyage to St. Eustatia, I bought two glasses with one bit, and with the other three I bought a jug of Geneva, nearly about three pints in measure. When we came to Montferrat, I fold the gin for eight bits, and the tumblers for two, fo that my capital now amounted in all to a dollar, well husbanded: and acquired in the space of a month or six. weeks, when I bleffed the Lord that I was forich. As we sailed to different islands, I laid this money out in various things occasionally. and it used to turn to very good account, especially when we went to Guadaloupe, Grenada, and the rest of the French islands... Thus was I going all about the islands upwards of four years, and ever trading as I. went, during which I experienced many instances of ill usage, and have seen many injuries done to other negroes in our dealings with whites; and, amidst our recreations, when.

when we have been dancing and merry-making, they without cause, have molested and insulted us. Indeed I was more than once obliged to look up to God on high, as I had advised the poor fisherman some time before. And I had not been long trading for myself in the manner I have related above, when I experienced the like trial in company with him as follows: This man being used to the water, was, upon an emergency put on board of us by his master to work as another hand, on a voyage to Santa Cruz; and at our failing he had brought his little all for a venture, which confisted of fix bits worth of limes and oranges in a bag; I had also my whole stock; which was about twelve bits' worth of the same kind of goods, separate in two bags; for we had heard these fruits sold well in that island. When we came there, in some little convenient time, he and I went ashore with our fruits to fell them; but we had scarcely landed, when we were met by two white men, who prefently took our three bags from us. We could not at first guess what they meant to do, and for some time we thought they were jesting with us; but they too soon let us know otherwise: for they took our ventures immediately to a house hard by, and adjoining the fort, while we followed all the way begging of them to give us our fruits, but in vain. They not only refused to return them, but swore at us, and threatened if we did not immediately depart, they would flog us well. We told them these three bags were all we were worth in the world; that we brought them with us to fell, and that we came from Montferrat, and showed them the vessel. But this was rather against us, as they now faw we were strangers as well as slaves. They still therefore swore, and desired us to be gone, and even took flicks to beat us: while we, feeing they meant what they faid, went off in the greatest confusion and despair. Thus, in the very minute of gaining more by three times than I ever did by any venture in my life before, was I deprived of every farthing I was worth. An insupportable missortune! but how to help ourselves we knew not. In our consternation we went to the commanding officer of the fort, and told him how we had been served by some of his people; but we obtained not the least redress: he answered our complaints only by a volley of imprecations against us, and immediately took a horse-whip, in order to chastise us, so that we were obliged to turn out much faster than we came in. I now, in the agony of distress and indignation, wished that the ire of God, in his forked lightning, might transfix these cruel oppressors among the dead. Still, however, we persevered; went back again to the house, and begged and befought them again and again for our fruits, till at last some other people that were in the house asked if we would be contented if they kept one bag, and gave us the other two. We, seeing no remedy whatever, consented to this; and they, observing one bag to have both kinds of fruit in it, which belonged to my companion, kept that; and the other two, which were mine, they gave us back. As foon as I got them, I ran as fast as I could. and got the first negro man I could to help me off; my companion, however, staid a little longer to plead; he told them the bag they had was his, and likewife all that he was worth in the world; but this was of no avail. and he was obliged to return without it. The poor old man, wringing his hands, cried bitterly for his loss; and, indeed, he then did look up to God on high, which fo moved me with pity for him, that I gave him nearly one third of my fruits. We then proceeded to the market to fell them; and Providence was more favourable to us than we could have expected, for we fold our fruits uncommonly well; I got for mine about thirty-feven bits. Such:

Such a surprising reverse of fortune in so short a space of time seemed like a dream, and proved no small encouragement for me to trust the Lord in any situation. My captain afterwards frequently used to take my part, and get me my right, when I have been plundered or used ill by these tender Christian depredators; among whom I have shuddered to observe the unceasing blasphemous executions which are wantonly thrown out by persons of all ages and conditions; not only without occasion, but even as if they were indulgences and pleasure.

At one of our trips to St. Kitt's, I had eleven bits of my own; and my friendly captain lent me five more, with which I bought a Bible. I was very glad to get this book, which I fearcely could meet with any where. I think there was none fold in Montferrat; and, much to my grief, from being forced out of the Ætna in the manner I have related, my Bible, and the Guide to the Indians, the two books I loved above all others, were left behind.

While I was in this place, St. Kitt's, a very curious imposition on human nature took place:—A white man wanted to marry in the church a free black woman that had land and slaves in Montserrat: but the clergyman told him him it was against the law of the place to marry a white and a black in the church. The man then asked to be married on the water, to which the parson consented, and the two lovers went in one boat, and the parson and clerk in another, and thus the ceremony was performed. After this the loving pair came on board our vessel, and my captain treated them extremely well, and brought them safe to Montserrat.

The reader cannot but judge of the irkfomeness of this fituation to a mind like mine, in being daily exposed to new hardships and impositions, after having seen many better days, and been, as it were, in a state of freedom and plenty; added to which, every part of the world I had hitherto been in feemed to me a paradise in comparison of the West In-My mind was therefore hourly replete with inventions and thoughts of being freed, and, if possible, by honest and honourable means; for I always remembered the oldadage, and I trust it has ever been my ruling principle, "that honesty is the best policy;" and likewise that other golden precept—"To " do unto all men as I would they should do " unto me." However, as I was from early years a predeftinarian, I thought whatever fate had determined must ever come to pass;

and therefore, if ever it were my lot to be freed, nothing could prevent me, although I should at present see no means or hope to obtain my freedom; on the other hand, if it were my fate not to be freed, I never should be so, and all my endeavours for that purpose would be fruitless. In the midst of these thoughts I therefore looked up with prayers anxiously to God for my liberty; and at the same time used every honest means, and did all that was possible on my part to obtain it.

In process of time I became master of a few pounds, and in a fair way of making more, which my friendly captain knew very well: this occasioned him sometimes to take liberties with me; but whenever he treated me waspishly, I used plainly to tell him my mind, and that I would die before I would be imposed upon as other negroes were, and that to me life had lost its relish when liberty was gone. This I said, although I foresaw my then well-being or future hopes of freedom. (humanly speaking) depended on this man. However, as he could not bear the thoughts of my not failing with him, he always became mild on my threats: I therefore continued with him; and, from my great attention to his orders and his business, I gained him credit, and through his kindness to me I at last procured procured my liberty. While I thus went on, filled with the thoughts of freedom, and reafting oppression as well as I was able, my life hang daily in suspence, particularly in the furfs I have formerly mentioned, as I could not fwim. These are extremely violent throughout the West Indies, and I was ever exposed to their howling rage and devouring fury in all the islands. I have seen them strike and toss a boat right up an end, and maim several on board. Once in the Grenada islands, when I and about eight others were pulling a large boat with two puncheons of water in it, a furf strock us, and drove the boat and all in it about half a stone's throw, among fome trees, and above the high water mark.. We were obliged to get all the assistance we could from the nearest estate to mend the boat, and launch it into the water - again. At Montferrat one night, in pressing hard to get off the shore on board, the punt was overfet with us four times; the first time I was very near being drowned; however the jacket I had on kept me up above water a little space of time, while I called on a man near me who was a good fwimmer, and told him I could not fwim; he then made hafte to me, and, just as I was finking, he caught hold of me, and brought me to founding, and then he went and brought the punt alfo. As foon as we had turned the water out of her, left we should be used ill for being absent, we attempted again three times more, and as often the horrid furfs ferved us as at first: but at last, the fifth time we attempted, we gained our point, at the imminent hazard of our lives. One day also, at Old Road, in Montserrat, our captain, and three men besides myself, were going in a large canoe in quest of rum and fugar, when a fingle forf toffed the ca-noe an amazing diffance from the water, and fome of us near a stone's throw from each other; most of us were very much bruised; so that I and many more often faid, and really thought, that there was not fuch another place under the heavens as this. I longed, there-fore, much to leave it, and daily wished to see my mafter's promise performed of going to Philadelphia.

While we lay in this place, a very cruel thing happened on board of our floop, which filled me with horror; though I found afterward fuch practices were frequent. There was a very clever and decent free young mulatto-man who failed a long time with us; he had a free woman for his wife, by whom he had a child; and she was then living on shore, and all very happy. Our captain and mate, and other people on board, and feveral elfe-where, even the natives of Bermudas, then with us, all knew this young man from a child that he was always free, and no one had ever claimed him as their property: however, as might too often overcomes right in these parts, it happened that a Berinudas captain, whose vessel lay there for a few days in the road, came on board us, and feeing the mulatto-man, whose name was Joseph Clipson, he told him he was not free, and that he had orders from his master to bring him to Bermudas. The poor man could not believe the captain to be in earnest; but he was very soon undeceived, his men laying violent hands on him; and although he shewed a certificate of his being born free in St. Kitt's, and most people on board knew that he ferved his time to boat-building, and always passed for a free man, yet he was forcibly taken out of our vessel. He then asked to be carried ashore before the secretary or magistrates, and these infernal invaders of human rights promised him he should; but, instead of that, they carried him on board of the other vessel: and the next day, without giving the poor man any hearing on shore, or suffering him even to see his wife or child, he was carried away, and probably doomed never more world world to see them again. Nor was this the only instance of this kind of barbarity I was a witness to. I have since often seen in Jamaica, and other islands, free men, whom I have known in America, thus vilainously trepanned and held in bondage. I have heard of two fimilar practices even in Philadelphia: and were it not for the benevolence of the quakers in that city, many of the fable race, who now breathe the air of liberty, would, I believe, be groaning indeed under some planter's chains. These things opened my mind to a new scene of horror, to which I had been before a stranger. Hitherto I had thought only flavery dreadful; but the state of a free negro appeared to me now equally so at least, and in some respects even worse, for they live in constant alarm for their liberty, which is but nominal, for they are universally infulted and plundered, without the possibility of redress; for such is the equity of the West Indian laws, that no free negroe's evidence will be admitted in their courts of justice. this fituation is it surprising that slaves, when mildly treated, should prefer even the misery of flavery to fuch a mockery of freedom? I was now completely disgusted with the West Indies, and thought I should never be entirely free until I had left them.

I determined to make every exertion to obtain my freedom, and to return England. For this purpose, I thought a knowledge of navigation might be of use to me; for, though I did not intend to run away unless I should be ill used, yet, in such a case, if I understood navigation, I might attempt my escape in our sloop, which was one of the fwiftest failing vessels in the West Indies, and I could be at no loss for hands to join me: and, if I should make this attempt, I had intended to have gone for England; but this, as I faid, was only to be in the event of my meeting with any ill usage. I therefore employed the mate of our vessel to teach me + navigation, for which I agreed to give him twenty-four dollars, and actually paid him part of the money down; though, when the captain, fome time after, came to know that the mate was to have fuch a fum for teaching me, he rebuked him, and said it was a shame for him to take any money from me. . However, my progress in this useful art was much retarded.

retarded, by the constancy of our work. Had I wished to run away, I did not want oppor-. tunities, which frequently prefented themselves; and particularly at one time, soon after this. When we were at the island of Guadaloupe, there was a large fleet of merchantmen bound for Old France; and, seamen then being very scarce, they gave from fifteen to twenty pounds a man for the run. Our mate, and all the white failors, left our vessel on this account, and went on board of the French ships. They would have had me also to go with them, for they regarded me, and swore to protect me if I would go: and, as the fleet was to fail the next day, I really believe I could have got fafe to Europe at that time. However, as my mafter was kind, I would not attempt to leave him; still remembering the old maxim, that "honesty is the best policy," I suffered them to go without me. Indeed my captain was much afraid of my leaving him and the veffel at that time, as I had so fair an opportunity: bur, I thank God, this sidelity of mine turned out much to my advantage hereafter, when I did not in the least throk of it; and made me so much in favour with the captain, that he used now and then to teach me some parts of navigation himself; but some of our passengers, and others, seeing this, found much fault with him for it, saying, it was a very dangerous thing to let a negro know navigation; thus I was hindered again in my pursuits. About the latter end of the year 1764, my master bought a larger floop, called the Prudence, about seventy or eighty tons, of which my captain had the command. I went with him into this vessel, and we took a load of new flaves for Georgia and Charles Town. master now left me entirely to the captain, though he still wished for me to be with him; but I, who always much wished to lose fight of the West Indies, was not a little rejoiced at the thoughts of seeing any other country. Therefore, relying on the goodness of my captain, I got ready all the little venture I could; and, when the vessel was ready, we sailed to my great joy. When we got to our destined places, Georgia and Charles Town, I expected I should have an opportunity of felling my little property to advantage; but here, particularly in Charles Town, I met with buyers, white men, who imposed on me as in other places. Notwithstanding, I was resolved to have fortitude, thinking no lot or trial too hard when kind Heaven is the rewarder.

We foon got loaded again, and returned to Montferrat; Montserrat; and there, among the rest of the islands, I fold my goods well; and in this manner I continued trading during the year 1764; meeting with various scenes of imposition, as usual. After this, my master sitted out his vessel for Philadelphia, in the year 1765; and during the time we were loading her, and getting ready for the voyage, I worked with redoubled alacrity, from the hope of getting money enough by these voyages to buy my freedom, in time, if it should please God; and also to see the town of Philadelphia, which I had heard a great deal about for some years past; besides which, I had always longed to prove my master's promise the first day I came to him. In the mid these elevated ideas, and while I was about getting my little merchandise in readiness, one Sunday my master sent for me to his house. When I came there I found him and the captain together; and, on my going in, I was struck with astonishment at his telling me he heard that I meant to run away from him when I got to Philadelphia: 'And there-'fore,' faid he, 'I must sell you again: you cost me a great deal of money, no less than forty pounds sterling; and it will not do to lose so much. You are a valuable fellow, continued he, and I can get any day for H

you one hundred guineas, from many gentlemen in this island. And then he told me of Captain Doran's brother-in law, a severe master, who ever wanted to buy me to make me his overseer. My captain also said he could get much more than a hundred guineas for me in Carolina. This I knew to be a fact: for the gentleman that wanted to buy me came off several times on board of us, and spoke to me to live with him, and said he would use me well. When I asked what work he would put me to, he faid, as I was a failor, he would make me a captain of one of his rice vessels. But I refused: and fearing, at the same time, by a sudden turn I saw in the captain's temper, he might mean to fell me, I told the gentleman I would not live with him on any condition, and that I certainly would run away with his veffel: but he said he did not fear that, as he would catch me again; and then he told me how cruelly he would serve me if I should do so. tain, however, gave him to understand that I knew something of navigation: so he thought better of it; and, to my great joy, he went away. I now told my master I did not say I would run away in Philadelphia; neither did I meant it, as he did not use me ill, nor yet the captain: for if they did, I certainly would have made some attempts before now; but as I thought that if it were God's will I ever should be freed it would be so; and, on the contrary, if it was not his will, it would not happen; so I hoped, if ever I were freed, whilst I was used well, it should be by honest means; but as I could not help myself, he must do as he pleased; I could only hope and trust to the God of Heaven; and at that instant my mind was big with inventions, and full of schemes to escape. I then appealed to the captain, whether ever he saw any sign of my making the leaft attempt to run away; and asked him if I did not always come on board according to the time for which he gave me liberty; and, more particularly, when all our men left us at Guadaloupe, and went on board of the French fleet, and advised me to go with them, whether I might not, and that he could not have got me again. To my no small surprise, and very great joy, the captain confirmed every syllable that I had said, and even more; for he said he had tried different times to fee if I would make any attempt of this kind, both at St. Eustatia and in America, and he never found that I made the smallest; but, on the contrary, I always came on board according to his orders; and he did really believe, if I ever meant to run away, H 2 that that, as I could never have had a better opportunity, I would have done it the night the mate and all the people left our veffel at Guadaloupe. The captain then informed my master, who had been thus imposed on by our mate (though I did not know who was my enemy), the reason the mate had for imposing this lie upon him; which was, because I had acquainted the captain of the provisions the mate had given away, or taken out of the vel-This speech of the captain was like life to the dead to me, and instantly my foul glorified God; and still more so on hearing my master immediately say that I was a sensible fellow, and he never did intend to use me as a common flave; and that, but for the entreaties of the captain, and his character of me, he would not have let me go from the stores about as I had done; that also, in so doing, he thought by carrying one little thing or other to different places to fell I might make money. That he also intended to encourage me in this, by crediting me with half a puncheon of rum and half a hogshead of fugar at a time; so that, from being careful, I might have money enough, in some time, to purchase my freedom; and, when that was the case, I might depend upon it he would let me have it for forty pounds sterling money, which was only the same price he gave for me. This soon gladdened my poor heart beyond measure; though indeed it was no more than the very idea I had formed in my mind of my master long before, and I immediately made him this reply: Sir, I always had that very thought of you, indeed I had, and that made me so diligent in serving you. He then gave me a large piece of silver coin, such as I had never seen or had before, and told me to get ready for the voyage, and he would credit me with a tierce of fugar and another of rum; he also said that he had two amiable fifters in Philadelphia, from whom I might get some necessary things. Upon this my noble captain defired me to go aboard; and, knowing the African mettle, he charged me not to fay any thing of this matter to any body; and he promised that the lying mate hould not go with him any more. This was a change indeed; in the same hour to feel the most exquisite pain, and in the turn of a mo-ment the fullest joy. It caused in me such sensations as I was only able to express in my looks; my heart was so overpowered with gratitude, that I could have kissed both of their feet, When I left the room, I immediately went, or rather flew, to the veffel, which being loaded, my mafter, as good as his word, He trusted me with a tierce of rum, and another of sugar; when we sailed, and arrived safe at the elegant town of Philadelphia. I soon sold my goods here pretty well; and in this charming place I sound every thing plentiful and

cheap.

While I was in this place a very extraor-dinary occurrence befel me. I had been told one evening of a wife woman, a Mrs. Davis, who revealed fecrets, foretold events, &c. I put little faith in this story at first, as I could not conceive that any mortal could foresee the future disposals of Providence, nor did I believe in any other revelation than that of the Holy Scriptures; however, I was greatly aftonished at seeing this woman in a dream that night, though a person I never before beheld in my live; this made such an impression on me, that I could not get the idea the next day out of my mind, and I then became as anxious to see her as I was before indifferent; accordingly, in the evening, after we left off working, I inquired where she lived, and, being directed to her, to my inexpressible furprise, beheld the very woman in the very same dress she appeared to me to wear in the vision. She immediately told me I had dreamed of her the preceding night; related to me many things that had happened with a correctness rectness that assonished me; and finally told me I should not be long a slave: this was the more agreeable news, as I believed it the more readily from her having so faithfully related the past incidents of my life. She said I shall be twice in very great danger of my life within eighteen months, which, if I escaped, I should afterwards go on well; so giving me her blessing, we parted. After staying here some time till our vessel was loaded, and I had bought in my little traffic, we sailed from this agreeable spot for Montferrat, once more to encounter the raging surfs.

We arrived fafe at Montserrat, where we discharged our cargo; and soon after that we took flaves on board for St. Eustatia, and from thence to Georgia. I had always exerted myfelf, and did double work, in order to make our voyages as short as possible; and from thus overworking myself while we were at Georgia I caught a fever and ague. I was very ill eleven days, and near dying; eternity was now exceedingly impressed on my mind, and I feared very much that awful event. I prayed the Lord therefore to spare me; and I made a promise in my mind to God, that I would be good if ever I should recover. At length, from having an eminent Doctor to attend me, I was restored again to health; and soon after we got the veffel loaded, and fet off for Montferrat. During the passage, as I was perfectly restored, and had much business of the vessel to mind, all my endeavours to keep up my integrity, and perform my promife to God, began to fail; and, in spite of all I could do, as we drew nearer and nearer to the islands, my resolutions more and more declined, as if the every air of that country or climate seemed fatal to piety. When we were fafe arrived at Montferrat, and I had got ashore, I forgot my former resolutions. - Alas! how prone is the heart to leave that God it wishes to love! and how Arongly do the things of this world Arike the fenses and captivate the foul !-After our vessel was discharged, we soon got her ready, and took in, as usual, some of the poor oppressed natives of Africa, and other negroes; we then set off again for Georgia and Charles-We arrived at Georgia, and, having landed part of our cargo, proceeded to Charlestown with the remainder. While we were there I faw the town illuminated, the guns were fired, and bonfires and other demonstrations of joy shewn, on account of the repeal of the stampact. Here I disposed of some goods on my own account; the white men buying them with smooth promises and fair words, giving me, however, but very indifferent payment. There was one gentlemen particularly who bought a puncheon of rum of me, which gave me a great deal of trouble; and although I used the interest of my friendly captain, I could not ob-tain any thing for it; for, being a negro man, I could not oblige him to pay me. This vexed me much, not knowing how to act; and I lost some time in seeking after this Christian; and though, when the Sabbath came (which the negroes usually make their holiday) I was much inclined to go to public worship, but instead of that I was obliged to hire some black men to help me to pull a boat acrofs the water to go in quest of this gentleman. When I found him, after much entreaty, both from myself and my worthy captain, he at last paid me in dollars; some of them however, were copper, and of consequence of no value; but he took advantage of my being a negro man, and obliged me to put up with those or none; although I objected to them. Immediately after, as I was trying to pass them in the market amongst other white men, I was abused for offering to pass bad coin; and though I shewed them the man I had got them. from, I was within one minute of being tied up and flogged without either judge or jury; however, by the help of a good pair of heels, I ran off, and so escaped the bastinadoes I should: have received. I got on board as fast as I could, but still continued in sear of them until we sailed, which, I thank God, we did not long after; and I have never been amongst them since.

We foon came to Georgia, where we were to complete our lading; and here worse fate than ever attended me: For one Sunday night, as I was with some negroes in their master's yard in the town of Savannah, it happened that their master, one Doctor Perkins, who was a very severe and cruel man, came in drunk; and not liking to see any strange negroes in his yard, he, and a ruffian of a white man he had in his service, beset me in an instant, and both of them struck me with the first weapons they could get hold of. I cried out as long as I could for help and mercy; but, though I gave a good account of my-felf, and he knew my captain, who lodged hard by him, it was to no purpose. They beat and mangled me in a shameful manner, leaving me near dead. I lost so much blood from the wounds I received, that I lay quite motionless, and was so benumbed that I could not feel any thing for many hours. Early in the morning they took me away to the jail. As I did not return to the ship all night, my captain not knowing where I was, and being uneasy that I did not then make my appearance, he made inquiry after me; and, having found where I was, immediately came to me. As foon as the good man faw me so cut and mangled, he could not forbear weeping; he foon got me out of jail to his lodgings, and immediately fent for the best doctors in the place, who at first declared it as their opinion that I could not recover. My captain on this went to all the lawyers in the town for their advice, but they told him they could do nothing for me as I was a negro. He then went to Dr. Perkins, the hero who had vanguished me, and menaced him, swearing he would be revenged of him, and challenged him to fight. But cowardice is ever the companion of cruelty—and the Doctor refused. However, by the skilfulness of one Doctor Brady of that place, I began at last to amend; but, although I was so sore and bad with the wounds I had all over me that I could not rest in any posture, yet I was in more pain on account of the captain's uneafiness about me than I otherwise should have been. The worthy man nursed and watched me all the hours of the night; and I was, through his attention, and that of the Doctor, able to get out of bed in about fixteen or eighteen days. time I was very much wanted on board, as I used frequently to go up and down the river for rafts, and other parts of our cargo, and flow them, when the mate was fick or absent. In about four weeks I was able to go on duty; and in a fortnight after, having got in all our lading, our vessel set sail for Montserrat; and in less than three weeks we arrived there safe, towards the end of the year. This ended my adventures in 1765; for I did not leave Montserrat again till the beginning of the sollowing year.

Every day now brought me nearer my freedom, and I was impatient till we proceeded again to sea, that I might have an opportunity of getting a sum large enough to purchase it. I was not long ungratisted; for, in the beginning of the year 1766, my master bought another sloop, named the Nancy, the largest I had ever seen. She was partly laden, and was to proceed to Philadelphia; our captain had his choice of three, and I was well pleased he chose this, which was the

the largest: for, from his having a large veffel, I had more room, and could carry a larger quantity of goods with me. Accordingly, when we had delivered our old veffel, the Prudence, and completed the lading of the Nancy, having made near three hundred per cent. by four barrels of pork I brought from Charlestown, I laid in as large a cargo as I could, truffing to God's providence to profper my undertaking. With these views I failed for Philadelphia. On our passage, when we drew near the land, I was for the first time surprised at the fight of some whales, having never feen any fuch large fea monsters before; and, as we sailed by the land, one morning I saw a puppy whale close by the vessel; it was about the length of a wherry boat, and it followed us all the day till we got within the Capes. We arrived fafe and in good time at Philadelphia, and I fold my goods there chiefly to the Quakers. always appeared to be a very honest discrect fort of people, and never attempted to impose on me; I therefore liked them, and ever after chose to deal with them in preference to any others.

One Sunday morning, while I was here, as I was going to church, I chanced to pass a meeting-house. The doors being open, and the house full of people, it excited my curiofity to go in. When I entered the house, to my great surprise, I saw a very tall woman standing in the midst of them, speaking in an audible voice fomething which I could not understand. Having never seen any thing of this kind before, I stood and stared about me for some time, wondering at this odd scene. As foon as it was over, I took an opportunity to make inquiry about the place and people, when I was informed they were called Quakers. I particularly asked what that woman I faw in the midst of them had said, but none of them were pleased to satisfy me; so I quitted them, and foon after, as I was returning, I came to a church crowded with people; the church-yard was full likewise, and a number of people were even mounted on ladders, looking in at the windows. I thought this a strange fight, as I had never seen churches, either in England or the West Indies, crowded in this manner before. I therefore made bold to ask some people the meaning of all this, and they told me the Rev. Mr. George Whitfield was preaching. I had often heard of this gentleman, and had wished to see and hear him; bur I had never before had an opportunity. I now therefore resolved to gratify myself with the fight, and preffed pressed in amidst the multitude. When I got into the church I saw this pious man exhorting the people with the greatest fervour and earnestness, and sweating as much as I ever did while in slavery at Montserrat beach. I was very much struck and impressed with this; I thought it strange I had never seen divines exert themselves in this manner before, and was no longer at a loss to account for the thin congregations they preached to.

When we had discharged our cargo here, and were loaded again, we left this fruitful land once more, and fet sail for Montserrat. My traffic had hitherto succeeded so well with me, that I thought, by felling my goods when we arrived at Montserrat, I should have money enough to purchase my freedom. But as soon as our vessel arrived there, my master came on board, and gave orders for us to go to St. Eustatia, and discharge our cargo there, and from thence proceed to-Georgia. I was much disappointed at this; but thinking, as usual, it was of no use to murmur at the decrees of fate, I submitted without repining, and we went to St. Eustatia. After we had discharged our cargo there we took in a live cargo, (as we call a cargo of flaves). Here I fold my goods tolerably well; but, not being able to lay out all my money in this small island to as much advantage as in many other places, I laid out only part, and the remainder I brought away with me neat. We sailed from hence for Georgia, and I was glad when we got there, though I had not much reason to like the place from my last adventure in Savannah; but I longed to get back to Montserrat and procure my freedom, which I expected to be able to purchase when I returned. As soon as we arrived here I waited on my careful doctor, Mr. Brady, to whom I made the most grateful acknowledgments in my power for his former kindness and attention during my illness.

While we were here, an odd circumstance happened to the captain and me, which disappointed us both a good deal. A filver-smith, whom we had brought to this place some voyages before, agreed with the captain to return with us to the West Indies, and promised at the same time to give the captain a great deal of money, having pretended to take a liking to him, and being as we thought very rich. But while we stayed to load our vessel this man was taken ill in a house were he worked, and in a week's time became very bad. The worse he grew the more he used to speak of giving the captain what he had promised him, so that he expected pected fomething confiderable from the death of this man, who had no wife or child, and he attended him day and night. I used also to go with the captain, at his own defire, to attend him; especially when we saw there was no appearance of his recovery; and, in order to recompense me for my trouble, the captain promised me ten pounds, when he should get the man's property. I thought this would be of great service to me, although I had nearly money enough to purchase my freedom, if I should get safe this voyage to Montferrat. In this expectation I laid out above eight pounds of my money for a fuit of superfine blue cloaths to dance in at my freedom, which I hoped was then at hand. We still continued to attend this man, and were with him even on the last day he lived, till very late at night, when we went on board. we were got to bed, about one or two o'clock in the morning, the captain was fent for, and informed the man was dead. On this he came to my bed, and, waking me, informed me of it, and defired me to get up and procure a light, and immediately go with him. I told him I was very sleepy, and wished he would take somebody else with him; or else, as the man was dead, and could want no farther attendance, to let all things remain as they were till the next morning. 'No, no,' faid he, 'we will have the money to-night, I canf not wait till to-morrow; so let us go.' Accordingly I got up and struck a light, and away we both went and faw the man as dead as we could wish. The captain said he would give him a grand burial, in gratitude for the promised treasure; and desired that all the things belonging to the deceased might be brought forth. Among others, there was a nest of trunks of which he had kept the keys whilst the man was ill, and when they were produced we opened them with no small eagerness and expectation; and as there were a great number within one another, with much impatience we took them one out of the other. At last, when we came to the smallest, and had opened it, we saw it was full of papers, which we supposed to be notes; at the fight of which our hearts leapt for joy; and that instant the captain, clapping his hands, cried out, 'Thank God! here it is.' But when we took up the trunk, and began to examine the supposed treasure and long-looked-for bounty, (alas! alas! how uncertain and deceitful are all human affairs!) what had we found? While we thought we were embracing a fubstance, we grasped an empty nothing!! The whole amount that was in the nest of trunks was only one dollar and a half; and all that the man possessed would not pay for his cossin. Our sudden and exquisite joy was now succeeded by as sudden and exquisite pain; and my captain and I exhibited, for fome time, most ridiculous figures—pictures of chagrin and disappointment! We went away greatly mortified, and left the deceased to do as well as he could for himself, as we had taken so good care of him when alive for nothing. We set sail once more for Montserrat, and arrived there fafe; but much out of humour with our friend the filversmith. When we had unladen the veffel, and I had fold my venture, finding myself master of about forty-seven pounds—I consulted my true friend, the captain, how I should proceed in offering my master the money for my freedom. He told me to come on a certain morning, when he and my master would be at breakfast together. Accordingly, on that morning, I. went, and met the captain there, as he had appointed. When I went in I made my obeifance to my mafter, and with my money in my hand, and many fears in my heart, I prayed him to be as good as his offer to me, when he was pleased to promise me my freedom as foon as I could purchase it. This speech seemed to consound him; he began to recoil :

recoil; and my heart funk that instant within me. 'What,' faid he, 'give you your freedom? Why, where did you get the money? Have you got forty pounds Sterling?' Yes, fir,' I answered. 'How did you get it?' replied he, I told him, 'Very honestly.' The captain then said he knew I got the money very honeftly, and with much industry, and that I was particularly careful. On which my master replied, I got money much faster than he did; and faid he would not have made the promise he did if he had thought I should have got money so soon. come, faid my worthy captain, clapping my master on the back, Come, Robert, (which was his name), I think you must let him have his freedom;—you have laid your money out very well; you have received good interest for it all this time, and here is now the principal at last. I know Gustavus had earned you more than an hundred a-year, and he will still save you money, as he will not leave you: Come, Robert, take the money.' My master then said, he would not be worse than his promise; and, taking the money, told me to go to the Secretary at the Register Office, and get my manumission drawn up. These words of my master were like a voice from heaven to me;

in an instant all my trepidation was turned into unuttered bliss; and I most reverently bowed myself with gratitude, unable to express my feelings, but by the overflowing of my eyes, and a heart replete with thanks to God; while my true and worthy friend the captain congratulated us both with a peculiar degree of heartfelt pleasure. As soon as the first transports of my joy were over, and I had expressed my thanks to these my worthy friends in the best manner I was able, I rose with a heart full of affection and reverence. and left the room in order to obey my mafter's joyful mandate of going to the Register Office. As I was leaving the house, I called to mind the words of the Psalmist, in the 126th Psalm, and like him, I glorified God ' in my heart, in whom I trusted.' These words had been impressed on my mind from the very day I was forced from Deptford to the present hour, and I now saw them, as I thought, fulfilled and verified. My imagination was all rapture as I flew to the Regifter Office; and, in this respect, like the apo-stle Peter *, (whose deliverance from prison was so sudden and extraordinary, that he thought he was in a vision), I could scarcely believe I was awake. Heavens! who could do justice to my seelings at this moment? Not conquering heroes themselves, in the amidst of a triumph—Not the tender mother who has just regained her long-lost infant, and presses it to her heart—Not the weary hungry mariner, at the sight of the desired friendly port—Not the lover, when he once more embraces his beloved mistress, after she has been ravished from his arms!—All within my breast was tumult, wildness, and delirium! My feet scarcely touched the ground, for they were winged with joy, and, like Elijah, as he rose to Heaven, they were with lightning sped as I went on. Every one I met I told of my happiness, and blazed about the virtue of my amiable master and captain.

When I got to the office and acquainted the Register with my errand, he congratulated me on the occasion, and told me he would draw up my manumission for half price, which was a guinea. I thanked him for his kindness; and, having received it, and paid him, I hastened to my master to get him to sign it, that I might fully be released. Accordingly he signed the manumission that day; so that, before night, I who had been a slave in the morning, trembling at the will of another, another, now became my own master, and compleatly free. I thought this was the happiest day I had ever experienced; and my joy was still heightened by the bleffings and prayers of many of the sable race, particular the aged, to whom my heart had ever been attached with reverence.

As the reform of my manumission has something peculiar in it, and expresses the absolute power and dominion one man claims over his fellow, I shall beg leave to present it before my readers at full length:

Montserrat.—To all men unto whom these presents shall come: I Robert King of the parish of St. Anthony in the said island, merchant, fend greeting: Know ye, that I the aforesaid Robert King, for, and in confideration of the fum of seventy pounds current money of the faid island, to me in hand paid, and to the intent that a negro man-flave, named Gultavus Vasa, shall and may become free, have manumitted, emancipated, enfranchised, and set free, and by these presents do manumit, emancipate, enfranchise, and set free, the aforesaid negro man-slave Gustavus Vasa, for ever; hereby giving, granting, and releasing unto him, the said Gustavus Vasa, all right, title, dominion, sovereignty, vereignty, and property, which, as lord and master over the aforesaid Gustavus Vasa, I have had, or which I now have, or by any means whatsoever I may or can hereaster possibly have over him the aforesaid Negro, for ever. In witness whereof, I the abovesaid Robert King, have unto these presents set my hand and seal, this tenth day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-six. ROBERT KING.

Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of Terry Legay.

Montserrat,

Registered the within manumission, at full length, this eleventh day of July, 1766; in liber D. TERRY LEGAY, Register.

In short, the fair as well as black people immediately styled me by a new appellation, to me the most desirable in the world, which was Freeman, and at the dances I gave my Georgia superfine blue cloaths made no indifferent appearance, as I thought. Some of the sable semales, who formerly stood aloof, now began to relax, and appear less coy; but my heart was still fixed on London, where I hoped to be ere long. So that my worthy captain, and his owner my late master, finding that the bent of my mind was towards London, said to me., We hope you won't leave 'us, but that you will still be with the vessels.' Here gratitude bowed me down; and none but the generous mind can judge of my feelings, struggling between inclination and duty. However, notwithstanding my wish to be in London, I obediently answered my benefactors that I would go in the vessel, and not leave them; and from that day I was entered on board as an able-bodied failor, at thirty-fix shillings per month, besides what perquisites I could make. My intention was to make a voyage or two, entirely to please these my honoured patrons; but I determined that the year following, if it pleafed God, I would fee Old England once more, and surprise my old master, Capt. Pascal, who was hourly in my mind; for I still loved him, notwithstanding his usage to me, and I pleased myself with thinking of what he would fay when he faw what the Lord had done for me in so short a time, instead of being, as he might perhaps suppose, under the cruel yoke of some planter. With these kind of reveries I often used to entertain myself, and shorten the time till my return; and now, being as in my original free African state, I embarked on board the Nancy.

Nancy, after having got all things ready for our voyage. In this state of serenity we sailed for St. Eustatia; and having smooth seas and calm weather, we soon arrived there: after taking our cargo on board, we proceeded to Savannah in Georgia, in August, 1766. While we were there, as usual, I used to go for the cargo up the rivers in boats: and when on this business, have been frequently beset by Alligators, which were very numerous on that coast and river; and shot many of them when they have been near getting into our boats; which we have with great difficulty sometimes prevented, and have been very much frightened at them. I have seen a young one sold in Georgia alive for six-pence,

During our stay at this place, one evening a slave belonging to Mr. Read, a merchant of Savannah, came near our vessel, and began to use me very ill. I entreated him, with all the patience I was master of, to desist, as I knew there was little or no law for a free negro here; but the sellow, instead of taking my advice, persevered in his insults, and even struck me. At this I lost all temper, and fell on him and beat him soundly. The next morning his master came to our vessel as we lay alongside the wharf, and desired me to come ashore that he might have me slogged

all round the town, for beating his negro flave. I told him he had insulted me, and had given the provocation, by first striking me. I had told my captain also the whole affair that morning, and wished him to have gone along with me to Mr. Read, to prevent bad consequences; but he said that it did not fignify, and if Mr. Read faid any thing, he would make matters up, and defired me to go to work, which I accordingly did. The captain being on board when Mr. Read came and applied to him to deliver me up, he said he knew nothing of the matter, I was a. free man. I was aftonished and frightened, atthis, and thought I had better keep where I: was than go ashore and be flogged round the town, without judge or jury. I therefore refused to stir; and Mr. Read went away, swearing he would bring all the constables in the town, for he would have me out of the When he was gone, I thought his threat might prove too true to my forrow; and I was confirmed in this belief, as well by the many instances I had seen of the treatmert of free negroes, as from a fact that had happened within my own knowledge here a fhort time before.

There was a free black man, a carpenter, that I knew, who for asking a gentleman that he worked for, for the money he had earned, was put into gaol; and afterwards this oppressed man was sent from Georgia, with false acculations, of an intention to fet the gentleman's house on fire, and run away with his slaves. I was therefore much embarrassed, and very apprehensive of a slogging at least. I dreaded, of all things, the thoughts of being stripped, as I never in my life had the marks of any violence of that kind. At that instant a rage seized my soul, and for a little I determined to resist the first man that should offer to lay violent hands on me, or basely use me without a trial; for I would sooner die like a free man, than suffer myfelf to be scourged by the hands of rushians, and my blood drawn like a flave. The Captain and others, more cautious, advised me to make haste and conceal myself; for they said Mr. Read was a very spiteful man, and he would foon come on board with constables, and take me. At first I refused this counsel, being determined to stand my ground; but at length, by the prevailing entreaties of the and Mr. Dixon, with whom he Captain lodged, I went to Mr. Dixon's house, which was a little out of the town, at a place called Yea-ma-chra. I was but just gone, when Mr. Read, with the constables, came for me, and fearched the veffel; but, not finding me there, he swore he would have me dead or I was secreted above five days; however, the good couracter which my Captain always gave me, as well as some other gentlemen who also knew me, procured me some friends. At last some of them told my Captain that he did not use me well, in suffering me thus to be imposed upon, and said they would see me redressed, and get me on board some other vessel. My Captain, on this, immediately went to Mr. Read, and told him, that ever fince I eloped from the vessel, his work had been neglected, and he could not go on with her loading, himself and mate not being well; and, as I had managed things on board for them, my absence must have retarded his voyage, and consequently hurt the owner; he therefore begged of him to forgive me, as he said he never heard any complaint of me before, during the several years I had been with him. After repeated entreaties, Mr. Read said I might go to hell, and that he would not meddle with me; on which my Captain came immediately to me at his lodging, and, telling me how pleasantly matters had gone on, defired me to go on board.

Some of my other friends then asked him if he had got the constables warrants from them? the Captain said, No. On this I was desired by them to stay in the house; and they said they would get me on board of some other vessel before the evening. When the Captain heard this he became almost distracted. He went immediately for the warrants, and, after using every exertion in his power, he at last got it from my hunters; but I had all the expences to pay.

After I had thanked all my friends for their kindness, I went on board again to my work, of which I had always plenty. We were in hafte to complete our lading, and were to carry twenty head of cattle with us to the West Indies, where they are a very profitable arti-In order to encourage me in working, and to make up for the time I had loft, my Captain promised me the privileges of carrying two bullocks of my own with me; and this made me work with redoubled ardour. As foon as I had got the veffel loaded, in doing which I was obliged to perform the duty of the mate as well as my own work, and when the bullocks were near coming on board, I asked the captain leave to bring my two, according to his promise; but, to my great surprise, he told me there was no room for them. I then asked him to permit me to take one; but he faid he could not. I was a good deal I 4 mortified mortified at this usage, and told him I had no notion that he intended thus to impose on me; nor could I think well of any man that was so much worse than his word. On this we had some disagreement, and I gave him to understand that I intended to leave the vessel. At this he appeared to be very much dejected; and our mate, who had been very fickly, and whose duty had long devolved upon me, advised him to persuade me to stay! in consequence of which he spoke very kindly to me, making many fair promises, telling me that, as the mate was so sickly, he could not do without me; and that as the safety of the veffel and cargo depended greatly upon me, he therefore hoped that I would not be offended at what had passed between us, and fwore he would make up all matters to me when we arrived in the West Indies; so I consented to save on as before. Soon after this, as the bullocks were coming on board, one of them ran at the captain, and butted him for furiously in the breast, that he never recovered of the blow. In order to make me some amends for this treatment about the bullocks, the captain now pressed me very much to take some turkies, and other fowls, with me, and gave me liberty to take as many as T could find room for; but I told him he knew very very well I had never carried any turkies before, as I always thought they were such tender birds that they were not fit to cross the However, he continued to press me to buy them for once; and, what seemed very furprifing to me, the more I was against it, the more he urged my taking them, infomuch that he enfured me from all losses that might happen by them, and I was prevailed on to take them; but I thought this very strange, as he had never acted so with me before. This, and not being able to dispose of my paper-money in any other way, induced me at length to take four dozen. The turkies, however, I was so diffarisfied about, that I determined to make no more voyages to this quarter, nor with this captain; and was very apprehensive that my free voyage would be the worst I had ever made.

We set sail for Montserrat. The captain and mate had been both complaining of sickness when we sailed, and as we proceeded on our voyage they grew worse. This was about November, and we had not been long at sea before we began to meet with strong northerly gales and rough seas; and in about seven or eight days all the bullocks were near being drowned, and sour or sive of them died. Our vessel, which had not been tight at first, was I s much less so now: and, though we were but nine in the whole, including five failors and myself, yet we were obliged to attend to the pump, every half or three quarters of an hour. The captain and mate came on deck as often as they were able, which was now but feldom; for they declined fo fast, that they were not well enough to make observations above four or five times the whole paffage. The whole care of the vessel rested therefore upon me; and I was obliged to direct her by mere dint of reason, not being able to work a traverse. The Captain was now very forry he had not taught me navigation, and protested, if ever he should get well again, he would not fail to do so: but in about seventeen days his illness increased so much, that he was obliged to keep his bed, continuing sensible, however, till the last, confantly having the owner's interest at heart; for this just and benevolent man ever appeared much concerned about the welfare of what he was intrusted with. When this dear friend found the symptoms of death approaching, he called me by my name; and, when I came to him, he asked (with almost his last breath) if he had ever done me any harm? God ' forbid I should think so,' I replied, 'I should then be the most ungrateful of wretches to the best of benefactors.' While I was thus expressing my affection and forrow by his bedfide, he expired without faying another word, and the day following we committed his body to the deep. Every man on board loved him, and regretted his death; but I was exceedingly affected at it, and found that I did not know, till he was gone, the strength of my regard for him. Indeed I had every reason in the world to be attached to him; for, besides that he was in general mild, affable, generous, faithful, benevolent, and just, he was to me a friend and a father; and had it pleased Providence, that he had died but five months before, I verily believe I should not have obtained my freedom when I did; and it is not improbable that I might not have been able to get it at any rate afterwards.

The captain being dead, the mate came on the deck and made such observations as he was able, but to no purpose. In the course of a few days more, the bullocks that remained, were found dead; but the turkies I had, though on the deck, and exposed to so much wet and bad weather, did well, and I afterwards gained near three hundred per cent. on the fale of them; so that in the event it proved a happy circumstance for me that I had not bought the bullocks I intended, for · I 6

they must have perished with the rest; and I could not help looking on this, otherwise trifling circumstance, as a particular providence of God, and was thankful accordingly. care of the veffel took up all'my time, and engaged my attention entirely. As we were now out of the variable winds, I thought I should not be much puzzled to hit the Islands, I was persuaded I steered right for Antigua, which I wished to reach, as the nearest to us; and in the course of nine or ten days we made this island, to our great joy; and the day after we came safe to Montserrat.

Many were surprised when they heard of my conducting the floop into the port, and I now obtained a new appellation, and was called captain. This elated me not a little, and it was quite flattering to my vanity to be thus styled by as a high a title as any sable freeman in this place possessed. When the death of the captain became known, he was much regretted by all who knew him; for he was a man universally respected. At the same time the fable captain lost no fame; for the success I had met with increased the affection of my friends in no small measure; and I was offered, by a gentleman of the place, the command of' his floop to go amongst the islands, but I refused.

A S I had now, by the death of my captain, lost my great benefactor and friend, I had little inducement to remain longer in the West Indies, except my gratitude to Mr. King, which

which I thought I had pretty well discharged in bringing back his vessel safe, and delivering his cargo to his fatisfaction. I began to think of leaving this part of the world, of which I had been long tired, and returning to England, where my heart had always been; but Mr. King still pressed me very much to stay with his vessel; and he had done so much for me, that I found myfelf unable to refuse his requests, and consented to go another yoyage to Georgia, as the mate, from his ill state of health, was quite useless in the vessel. Accordingly, a new captain was appointed, whose name was William Phillips, an old acquaintance of mine; and, having refitted our vessel, and taken several slaves on board, we set fail for St Eustatia, where we staid but a few days; and on the 30th of January 1767, we steered for Georgia. new captain boasted strangely of his skill in navigating and conducting a vessel; and, in consequence of this, he steered a new course, feveral points more to the westward than we ever did before; this appeared to me very extraordinary.

On the 4th of February, which was foon after we had got into our new course, I dreamt the ship was wrecked amidst the surfs and rocks, and that I was the means of saving every every one on board; and on the night following I dreamed the very same dream. These dreams, however, made no impression on my mind; and the next evening, it being my watch below, I was pumping the vessel a little after eight o'clock, just before I went off the deck, as is the custom, and being weary with the duty of the day, and tired at the pump (for we made a good deal of water), I began to express my impatience, and uttered with an oath, 'Damn the vessel's bottom out.' my conscience instantly smote me for the expreffion. When I left the deck I went to bed, and had scarcely fallen asleep when I dreamed the same dream again about the ship as I had dreamt the two preceding nights. At twelve o'clock the watch was changed; and, as I had always the charge of the captain's watch, I then went upon deck. At half after one in the morning, the man at the helm faw fomething under the lee-beam that the sea washed against, and he immediately called to me that there was a grampus, and defired me to look at it. Accordingly, I stood up and observed it for some time; but, when I saw the sea wash up against it again and again, I said it was not a fish but a rock. Being soon certain of this, I went down to the captain, and, with some confusion, told him the danger we were in, and defired him to come upon deck immediately. He faid it was very well, and I went up again. As foon as I was upon deck, the wind, which had been pretty high, having abated a little, the veffel began to be carried fideways towards the rock, by means of the current. Still the captain did not appear. I therefore went to him again, and told him the vessel was then near a large rock, and desired he would come up with all speed. He faid he would, and I returned on the deck. When I was upon the deck again I saw we were not above a pistol shot from the rock, and I heard the noise of the breakers all around us. I was exceedingly alarmed at this; and the captain having not yet come on the deck I lost all patience; and, growing quite enraged, I ran down to him again, and asked him, why he did not come up, and what he could mean by all this? 'The breakers,' faid I, ' are around us, and the vessel is almost on 'the rock.' With that he came on the deck with me, and tried to put the vessel about, and get her out of the current, but all to no purpose, the wind being very small. We then called all hands up immediately; and after a little we got up one end of a cable, and fastened it to the anchor. By this time the furf foamed round us, and made a dreadful noise on the breakers, and the very moment we let the anchor go, the veffel struck against the rocks. One swell now succeeded another, as it were one wave calling on its fellow: The roaring of the billows encreased, and, with one fingle heave of the swells, the sloop was pierced and transfixed among the rocks! in a moment a scene of horror presented itself to my mind, fuch as I never had conceived or experienced before. All my fins stared me in the face; and especially I thought that God had hurled his direful vengeance on my guilty head for curfing the veffel on which my life depended. My spirits at this forsook me, and I expected every moment to go to the bottom: I determined if I should still be saved, that I would never swear again. And in the midst of my distress, while the dreadful surfs were dashing with unremitting fury among rocks, I remembered the Lord, though fearful that I was undeserving of forgiveness, and I thought that as he had often delivered, he might yet deliver; and, calling to mind the many mercies he had shewn me in times past, they gave me some small hope that he might still help me. I then began to think how we might be faved; and, I believe no mind was ever like mine so replete with inventions and confused with schemes, though how how to escape death I knew not. The captain immediately ordered the hatches to be nailed down on the flaves in the hold, where there were above twenty, all of whom must unavoidably have perished if he had been obeyed. When he defired the men to nail down the hatches I thought that my fin was the cause of this, and that God would charge me with these people's blood. This thought rushed upon my mind that instant with such violence, that it quite overpowered me, and I fainted. I recovered just as the people were about to nail down the hatches; perceiving which, I defired them to stop. The captain then said it must be done; I asked him why? He said, that every one would endeavour to get into the boat, which was but small, and thereby we should be drowned; for it would not have carried above ten at the most. I could no longer restrain my emotion, and I told him he deserved drowning for not knowing how to navigate the vessel; and I believe the people would have toffed him overboard if I had given them the least hint of it. However, the hatches were not nailed down; and, as none could leave the veffel then on account of the darkness, and as we knew not where to go, and were convinced besides that the boat could not survive the surfs, we all faid.

said we would remain on the dry part of the vessel, and trust to God till day-light appeared, when we should know better what to do.

I then advised to get the boat prepared against morning, and some of us began to set. about it; but others abandoned all care of the ship, and themselves, and fell to drinking. Our boat had a piece out of her bottom near two feet long, and we had no materials to mend her; however, necessity being the mother of invention, I took some pump-leather, and nailed it to the broken part, and plastered it over with tallow grease. And, thus pre-pared, with the utmost anxiety of mind, we watched for day-light, and thought every minute an hour, till it appeared. At last it faluted our longing eyes, and kind Providence accompanied its approach with what was no finall comfort to us; for the dreadful swells began to subside; and the next thing that we discovered to raise our drooping spirits, was a small key, or desolate island, about five or fix miles off; but a barrier foon presented itself; for there was not water enough for our boat to go over the reefs, and this threw us again into a fad consternation; but there was no alternative, we were therefore fore obliged to put but few things in the boat at once; and, what was still worse, all of us were frequently under the necessity of getting out to drag and lift it over the reefs. This cost us much labour and fatigue; and, what was yet more distressing, we could not avoid having our legs cut and torn very much with the rocks. There were only four people that would work with me at oars; and they consisted of three black men and a Dutch creole failor; and, though we went with the boat five times that day, we had no others to affift us. But, had we not worked in this manner, I really believe the people could not have been faved; for not one of the white men did any thing to preserve their lives; indeed they foon got fo drunk that they were not able, but lay about the deck like swine, so that we were at last obliged to lift them into the boat, and carry them on shore by force. This want of affistance made our labour intolerably severe; insomuch that, by going on shore so often that day, the skin was partly stript off my hands.

However, we continued all the day to toil and strain our exertions, till we had brought all on board safe to the shore; so that out of thirty-two people we lost not one.

Мy

My dream now returned upon my mind with all its force; it was fulfilled in every part; for our danger was the same I had dreamt of; and I could not help looking on myself as the principal instrument in effecting our deliverance: for, owing to some of our people getting drunk, the rest of us were obliged to double our exertions; and it was fortunate we did, for in a very little time longer the patch of leather on the boat would have been worn out, and she would have been no longer fit for service. Situated as we were. who could think that men should be so careless of the danger they were in? for, if the wind had but raised the swell as it was when the vessel struck, we must have bid a final farewell to all hopes of deliverance; and though I warned the people who were drinking, and entreated them to embrace the moment of deliverance, nevertheless they perfifted, as if not possessed of the least spark of reason. I could not help thinking, that if any of these people had been lost, God would charge me with their lives, which, perhaps, was one cause of my labouring so hard for their preservation, and indeed every one of them afterwards seemed so sensible of the fervice I had rendered them, that while we were on the key, I was a kind of chieftain amongst amongst them. I brought some limes, oranges, and lenions ashore; and, finding it to be a good foil were we where, I planted feveral of them as a token to any one that might be caft away hereafter. This key, as we afterwards found, was one of the Bahama islands, which confile of a cluster of large islands, with fmaller ones, or keys, as they are called, interspersed among them. It was about a mile in circumference, with a white sandy beach running in a regular order alone it. On that part of it where we first attempted to land there stood some very large birds, called samingoes: these, from the reflection of the fun, appeared to us at a little distance, as large as men; and, when they walked backwards and forwards, we could not conceive what they were: our captain swore they were cannibals. This created a great panic among os; and we held a consultation how to act. captain ganted to go to a key that was within fight, but a great way off; but I was against it, as in so doing we should not be able to fave all the people; 'And therefore,' faid I, · let us go on shore here, and perhaps these cannibals may take to the water,' Accordingly, we steered toward them: and when we a proached them, to our very great joy and no less wonder, they walked off one after the other

other very deliberately; and at last they took flight, and relieved us entirely from our fears. About the key there were turtles and several forts of fish in such abundance that we caught them without bait, which was a great relief to us after the salt provisions on board. There was also a large rock on the beach, about ten feet high; which was in the form of a punch-bowl at the top; this we could not help thinking Providence had ordained to supply us with rain-water; and it was something singular, that, if we did not take the water when it rained, in some little time after it would turn as salt as sea-water.

Our first care, after refreshment, was, to make ourselves tents to lodge in, which we did as well as we could with some sails we had brought from the ship. We then began to think how we might get from this place, which was quite, uninhabited; and we determined to repair our boat, which was very much shattered, and to put to sea in quest of a ship, or some inhabited island. It took us up however eleven days before we could get the boat ready for fea, in the manner we wanted it, with a fail and other necessaries. When we had got all things prepared, the captain wanted me to stay on shore, while he went to sea in quest of a vessel to take all the people people off the key; but this I refused; and the captain and myself, with five more, set off in the boat towards New Providence. We had no more than two musket load of gun powder with us, if any thing should happen; and our stock of provisions consisted of three gallons of rum, four of water, some salt beef, some biscuit; and in this manner we proceeded to sea.

On the fecond day of our voyage, we came to an island called Abbico, the largest of the Bahama islands. We were much in want of water; for by this time our water was expended, and we were exceedingly fatigued in pulling two days in the heat of the fun; and it being late in the evening, we hauled the boat ashore to try for water, and remain during the night: when we came ashore we fearched for water, but could find none. When it was dark, we made a fire around us for fear of the wild beafts, as the place was an entire thick wood, and we took it by turns to watch. In this fituation we found very little rest, and waited with impatience for the morning. As foon as the light appeared we fet off again with our boat, in hopes of find-ing affiftance during the day. We were now much dejected and weakened by pulling the boat; for our fail was of no use, and we were almost famished for want of fresh water to drink. We had nothing left to eat but falt beef, and that we could not use without water. In this situation we toiled all day in fight of the island, which was very long; in the evening, seeing no relief, we made shore again, and fastened our boat. We then went to look for fresh water, being quite faint for the want of it; and we dug and feared ed about for some all the remainder of the evening, but could not find one drop, so that our dejection at this period became excessive, and our terror so great, that we expected nothing but death to deliver us. We could not touch our beef, which was falt as brine, without fresh water; and we were in the greatest terror from the apprehension of wild beasts. When unwelcome night came, we acted as on , the night before; and the next morning we fet off again from the island in hopes of seeing some vessel. In this manner we toiled as well as we were able till four o'clock, during which we passed several keys, but could not meet with a ship; and, still famishing with thirst, went ashore on one of those keys again, in hopes of finding some water. Here we found some leaves with a few drops of water on them, which we lapped with much eager-ness; we then dug in several places, but without ont success. As we were digging holes in fearch of water, there came forth some very thick and black stuff; but none of us could touch it, except the poor Dutch creole, who drank about a quart of it, as eagerly as if it had been wine. We tried to catch fish, but could not: and we now began to repine at our fate, and abandon ourselves to despair; when, in the midst of our murmuring, the captain, all at once cried out, 'A fail! a fail!' a fail!' This gladdening found was like a reprieve to a convict, and we all instantly turned to look. at it; but in a little time some of us began to be afraid it was not a fail. However, at a venture, we embarked, and steered after it; and, in half an hour, to our unspeakable joy, we plainly faw that it was a vessel. At this our drooping spirits rivived, and we made towards her with all the speed imaginable. When we came near to her, we found the was a little floop, about the fize of a Gravefend hov, and quite full of people'; a circumstance which we could not make out the meaning of. Our captain, who was a Welchman, swore that they were pirates, and would kill us. I faid, be that as it might, we must board her if we were to die by it; and, if they should not receive us kindly, we must oppose them as well as we could; for there was no alternative tive between their perishing and ours. This counsel was immediately taken; and I really believe that the captain, myself, and the Dutchman, would then have faced twenty men. We had two cutlasses and a musquet, that I brought in the boat; and in this situation we rowed alongside, and immediately boarded her. I believe there were about forty hands on board; but how great was our surprise, as soon as we got on board, to find that the major part of them were in the same predicament as ourselves.

They belonged to a whaling schooner that was wrecked two days before us about nine miles to the north of our vessel. When she was wrecked, some of them had taken to their boats, and had left some of their people and property on a key, in the same manner as we had done; and were going, like us, to New Providence in quest of a ship, when they met with this little floop, called a wrecker; their employment in those seas being to look after wrecks. They were then going to take the remainder of the people belonging to the schooner; for which the wrecker was to have all things belonging to the vessel, and likewise their people's help to get what they could out of her, and were then to carry the crew to New Providence.

We told the people of the wrecker the condition of our veffel, and we made the same agreement with them as the schooner's people; and, on their complying, we begged of them to go to our key directly, because our people were in want of water. They agreed, therefore, to go along with us first; and in two days we arrived at the key, to the inexpressible joy of the people that we had left behind, as they had been reduced to great extremities for want of water in our absence. Luckily for us, the wrecker had now more people on board than the could carry or victual for any moderate length of time; they therefore hired the schooner's, people to work on the wreck, and we left them our boat, and embarked for New Providence.

Nothing could have been more fortunate than our meeting with this wrecker, for New Providence was at such a distance that we never could have reached it in our boat. The island of Abbico was much longer than we expected, and it was not till after failing for three or four days that we got safe to the sarther end of it, towards New Providence. When we arrived there, we watered, and got a good many lobsters and other shell-sish, which proved a great relief to us, as our provisions and water were almost exhausted. We then then proceeded on our voyage; but the day after we left the island, late in the evening, and whilst we were yet amongst the Bahama keys, we were overtaken by a violent gale of wind, so that we were obliged to cut away the mast. The vessel was very near foundering; for she parted from her anchors, and struck several times on the shoals. Here we expected every minute that the would have gone to pieces, and each moment to be our last; so much so, that my old captain and fickly useless mate, and several others, fainted; and death stared us in the face on every side. All the swearers on board now began to call on the God of Heaven to affift them: and fure enough, beyond our comprehension he did affift us, and in a miraculous manner delivered us! In the very height of our extremity the wind lulled for a few minutes; and, although the swell was high beyond expression, two men who were expert swimmers, attempted to go to the buoy of the anchor, which we still saw in the water, at some distance, in a little punt that belonged to the wrecker, which was not large enough to carry more than two. She filled at different times in their endeavours to get into her alongfide of our vessel; and they saw nothing but death before them, as well as we; but they faid K 4

they might as well die that way as any other. A coil of very small rope, with a little buoy, was put in along with them; and, at last, with great hazard, they got the punt clear from the vessel; and these two intrepid water heroes paddled away for life towards the buoy Our eyes were fixed on them of the anchor. all the time, expecting every minute to be their last; And the prayers of all those that remained in their fenses were offered up to God, on their behalf, for a speedy deliverance, and for our own, which depended on them; and he heard and answered us! These two men at last reached the buoy; and, having fastened the punt to it, they tied one end of their rope to the finall buoy that they had in the punt, and fent it adrift towards the We on board observing this, threw veffel. out boat-hooks and leads fastened to lines, in order to catch the buoy: At last we caught it, and fastened a hawser to the end of the small rope; we then gave them a fign to pull, and they pulled the hawfer to them, and fastened it to the buoy: which being done, we hauled for our lives, and, through the mercy of God, we got again from the shoals into deep water, and the punt got fafe to the veffel. It is impossible for any to conceive our heart-felt joy at this second deliverance from ruin, but those who have suffered the same hardships. Those whose strength and senses were gone, came to themselves, and were now as elated as they were before depressed. Two days after this the wind ceased, and the water smooth. The punt then went on shore, and we cut down some trees; and having found our mast and mended it, we brought it on board, and fixed it up. As foon as we had done this we got up the anchor, and away we went once more for New Providence, which in three days more we reached fafe, after having been above three weeks in a fituation in which we did not expect to escape with life. The inhabitants here were very kind to us; and, when they learned our fituation, shewed us a great deal of hospitality and friendship. Soon after this, every one of my old fellow-sufferers that were free, parted from us, and shaped their course where their inclination led them. One merchant, who had a large floop, feeing our condition, and knowing we wanted to go to Georgia, told four of us that his vesfel was going there; and if we would work on board and load her, he would give us our pas. fage free. As we could not get any wages whatever, and found it very hard to get off the place, we were obliged to consent to his proposal; and we went on board and helped K 5

to load the floop, though we had only our victuals allowed us. When the was entirely loaded, he told us the was going to Jamaica first, where we must go if we went in her. This, however, I refused; but my fellow-fusferers not having any money to help themselves with, necessity obliged them to accept of the offer, and to steer that course, though they did not like it.

We stayed in New Providence about seventeen or eighteen days; during which time I met with many friends, who gave me encouragement to stay there with them, but I declined it; though, had not my heart been fixed on England, I should have stayed, as I liked the place extremely, and there were some free black people here who were very happy, and we passed our time pleasantly together, with the melodious found of the catguts, under the lime and melon trees. length Capt. Phillips hired a floop to carry him and some of the saves that he could not sell here, to Georgia; and I agreed to go with him in this vessel, meaning now to take my farewell of that place. When the vessel was ready, we all embarked; and I took my leave of New Providence, not without regret. We sailed about four o'clock in the morning, with a fair wind, for Georgia; and, about eleven o'clock the same morning, a sudden and short gale sprung up and blew away most of our fails; and, as we were still among the keys, in a very few minutes it dashed the sloop against the rocks. Luckily for us the water was deep; and the sca was not so angry, but that, after having for some time laboured hard, and being many in number, we were faved through God's mercy; and, by using our greatest exertions, we got the vessel off. The next day we returned to Providence, where we foon got her again refitted. Some of the people Iwore that we had spells fer upon us, by somebody in Montserrat; and others, that we had witches and wizzards amongst the poor helpless slaves; and that we never should arrive safe at Georgia. these things did not deter me; I said, Let us again face the winds and seas, and swear not, but trust to God, and he will deliver us. We therefore once more fet sail; and, with hard labour, in seven days time arrived lafe at Georgia.

After our arrival we went up to the town of Savannah; and the same evening I went to a friend's house to lodge, whose name was Mosa, a black man. We were very happy at meeting each other; and, after supper we had a light till it was between nine and ten o'clock at night. About that time the watch or patrole came by, and, difcerning a light in the house, they knocked at the door; we opened it, and they came in and fat down, and drank some punch with us: they also begged some limes of me, as they understood I had fome, which I readily gave them. little after this they told me I must go to the watch-house with them; this surprised me a good deal, after our kindness to them; and I asked them, Why so? They said, that all negroes who had a light in their houses after nine o'clock were to be taken into custody, and either pay some dollars, or be flogged. Some of these people knew that I was a free man; but, as the man of the house was not free, and had his master to protect him, they did not take the same liberty with him they did with me. I told them that I was a free man, and just arrived from Providence; that we were not making any noise, and that I was not a stranger in that place, but was very well known there: 'Besides,' said I, 'what will you do with me?'—' That you shall see,' replied they, but you must go to the watch house with us.' Now, whether they meant to get money from me or not, I was at a loss to know; but I thought immediately of the oranges and limes at Santa Cruz: and feeing feeing that nothing would pacify them, I went with them to the watch-house, where I remained during the night. Early the next morning these imposing ruffians stogged a negro man and woman that they had in the watch-house, and then they told me that I must be flogged too; I asked why? and if there was no law for free men? and told them if there was, I would have it put in force against them. But this only exasperated them the more, and they instantly swore they would serve me as Doctor Perkins had done; and were going to lay violent hands on me; when one of them, more humane than the rest, said, that as I was a free man they could not justify stripping me by law. I then immediately sent for Dr. Brady, who was known to be an honest and worthy man; and on his coming to my affiftance they, let me go.

This was not the only difagreeable incident I met with while I was in this place; for, one day, while I was a little way out of the town of Savannah, I was beset by two white men, who meant to play their usual tricks with me in the way of kidnapping. As soon as these men accosted me, one of them said to the other, 'This is the very fellow we are looking for, that you lost: and the other swore immediately that I was the identical person.

On

On this they made up to me, and were about to handle me; but I told them to be still and keep off, for I had seen those kind of tricks played upon other free blacks, and they must not think to serve me so. At this they paused a little, and one said to the other—it will not do; and the other answered that I talked too good English. I replied, I believed I did; and I had also with me a revengeful slick equal to the occasion; and my mind was likewise good. Happily however it was not used; and, after we had talked together a little in this manner, the rogues left me.

I stayed in Savannah some time, anxiously trying to get to Montserrat once more to see Mr. King, my old master, and then to take a final farewell of the American quarter of the globe. At last I met with a sloop called the Speedwell, Captain John Bunton, which belonged to Grenada, and was bound to Martinico, a French island, with a cargo of rice;

and I shipped myself on board of her.

Before I left Georgia, a black woman who had a child lying dead, being very tenacious of the church burial fervice, and not able to get any white person to perform it, applied to me for that purpose. I told her I was no parson: and, besides, that the service over the dead did not affect the soul. This however did did not satisfy her; she still urged me very hard: I therefore complied with her earnest entreaties, and at last consented to act the parson for the first time in my life. As she was much respected, there was a great company both of white and black people at the grave. I then accordingly assumed my new vocation, and performed the funeral ceremony to the satisfaction of all present; after which I bade adieu to Georgia, and sailed for Martinico.

Pascal—Learns the French horn—Hires himself with Doctor. Capt. Phipps—Some account of that voyage, and the dangers the author was in—He returns to England.

I THUS took a final leave of Georgia; for the treatment I had received in it disgusted me very much against the place; and when I lest it and sailed for Martinico, I determined never more to revisit it. My new captain conducted his vessel safer than my former one; and, after an agreeable voyage we got safe to our intended port. While I was on this island I went about a good deal, and found it very pleasant: in particular, I admired the town of St. Pierre, which is the principal one in the island, and built more like an European town than any I had seen in the West Indies. general also, flaves were better treated, had more holidays, and looked better than those in the English islands. After we had done our business here, I wanted my discharge, which was necessary; for it was then the month of May, and I wished much to be at Montserrat to bid farewell to Mr. King, and all my other friends there, in time to fail for Old England in the July fleet. But, alas! I had put a great stumbling block in my own way, by which I was near losing my passage that season to England. I had lent my captain some money, which I now wanted, to enable me to prosecute my intentions. This I told him; but when I applied for it, though I urged the necessity of my occasion, I met with so much shuffling from him, that I began at last to be afraid of losing my money, as I could not recover it by law; for I have already mentioned, that throughout the West Indies no black man's testimony is admitted, on any occasion, against any white person whatever, and therefore my own oath would have been of no use. I was obliged therefore.

fore, to remain with him till beimight or ditposed to return it to me. Thus we sailed from Martinico for the Grenades. quently pressing the captain for my money, to no purpose; and, to render my condition worse, when we got there, the captain and his owners quaralled; so that my situation became daily more irksome: for besides that we on board had little or no victuals allowed us, and I could not get my money nor wages, as I could then have gotten my passage free to Montserrat had I been able to accept it. The worst of all was, that it was growing late in July, and the ships in the islands must sail by the 26th of that month. At last, however, with a great many entreaties, I got my money from the captain, and took the first veffel I could meet with for St. Eustatia. From thence I went in another to Basseterre in St. Kitt's, where I arrived on the 19th of July. On the Montserrat, I wanted to go in her; but the captain and others would not take me on board until I should advertise myself, and give notice of my going off the island. I told them of my haste to be in Montserrat, and that the time then would not admit of advertifing, it being late in the evening, and the vessel about to sail; but he insisted it was necessary.

necessary, and otherwise he said he would not take me. This reduced me to great perplexity; for if I should be compelled to submit to this degrading neoessity, which every black freeman is under, of advertising himself like a slave, when he leaves an island, and which I thought a gross imposition upon any which I thought a gross imposition upon any freeman, I feared I should miss that opportunity of going to Montserrat, and then I could not get to England that year. The vessel was just going off, and no time could be lost; I immediately therefore set about, with a heavy heart, to try who I could get to befriend me in complying with the demands of the captain. Luckily I found, in a few minutes, some gentlemen of Montserrat whom I knew; and, having told them may situation. I requested their friendly assistmy fituation, I requested their friendly affistance in helping me off the island. Some of them, on this, went with me to the captain, and satisfied him of my freedom; and, to my very great joy, he defired me to go on board. We then set sail, and the next day, 23d, I arrived at the wished-for place, after an absence of six months, which I had more than once experienced the delivering hand of Providence, when all human means of escaping destruction feemed hopeless. I saw my friends with a gladness of heart, which was increased by my absence, and the dangers I had escaped, and I was received with great friendship by them all, but particularly by Mr. King, to whom I related the fate of his floop, the Nancy, and the causes of her being wrecked. I now learned, with extreme forrow, that his house was washed away during my absence, by the bursting of a pond at the top of a mountain that was opposite the town of Plymouth. swept great part of the town away, and Mr. King loft a great deal of property from the inundation, and nearly his life. When I told him I intended to go to London that feafon, and that I had come to visit him before my departure, the good man expressed a great deal of affection for me, and forrow that I should leave him, and warmly advised me to stay there; infisting, as I was much respected by all the gentlemen in the place, that I might do very well, and in a fhort time have land and flaves of my own. I thanked him for this instance of his frieddship; but, as I wished very much to be in London, I declined remaining any longer there, and begged he would excuse me. I then requested he would be kind enough to give me a certificat of my behaviour while in his service, which he very readily complied with, and gave me the following:

Montserrat, 26th of July, 1767.

The bearer hereof, Gustavus Vasa, was my slave for upwards of three years, during which he has always behaved himself well, and discharged his duty with honosty and assiduity.

* Robert King.

To all whom this may concern.'

Having obtained this, I parted from my kind master, after many sincere professions of gratitude and regard, and prepared for my departure for London. I immediately agreed to go with one Capt. John Hamer, for seven guineas (the passage to London), on board a ship called the Andromache; and on the 24th and 25th, I had free dances, as they are called, with some of my friends and countrymen, previous to my setting off; after which I took leave of all my friends, and on the 26th I embarked for London, exceedingly glad to see myself once more on board of a ship, and still more so, in steering the course I had long wished for. With a light heart I bade Montferrat farewell, and never had my feet on it fince; and with it I bade adieu to the found of the cruel whip, and all other dreadful instruments of torture! adieu to the offensive fight of the violated chastity of the sable semales, which has too often accosted my eyes! adieu to oppressions (although to me less severe than to most of my countrymen)! and adieu to the angry, howling, dashing surfs! I wished for a grateful and thankful heart to praise the Lord God on high for all his mercies! in this extasy I steered the ship all night.

We had a most prosperous voyage, and, at the end of seven weeks, arrived at Cherrygarden stairs. Thus were my longing eyes once more gratified with a fight of London, after having been absent from it above four years. I immediately received my wages, and I never had earned seven guineas so quick in my life before; I had thirty-feven guineas in all when I got cleared of the ship. I now entered upon a scene quite new to me, but full of hope. In this fituation my first thoughts were to look out for some of my former friends, and amongst the first of those were the Miss Guerins. As soon as I had regaled myself I went in quest of those kind ladies, whom I was very impatient to see; and, with some difficulty and perseverance, I sound them them at May's-hill, Greenwhich. They were most agreeably surprised to see me, and I quite overjoyed at meeting with them. I told them my history, at which they expressed great wonder, and freely acknowledged it did their coufin, Capt. Pascal, no honour. He then visited there frequently; and I met him four or five days after in Greenwich-park. When he saw me, he appeared a good deal furprised, and asked me how I came back? I answered, ' In a ship.' To which he replied dryly, 'I suppose you did not walk back to London on the water.' As I saw, by his manner, that he did not feem to be forry for his behaviour to me, and that I had not much reason to expect any favour from him, I told him that he had used me very ill, after I had been such a faithful servant to him for fo many years; on which, without faving any more, he turned about and went away. A few days after this I met Capt. Pascal at Miss Guerin's house, and asked him for my prize-money. He said there was none due to me; for, if my prize-money had been 10,000l. he had a right to it all. I told him I was informed otherwise: on which he bade me defiance, and, in a bantering tone, defired me to commerce a law-fuit against him for it: 'There are lawyers enough,' faid he,

that will take the cause in hand, and you had better try it. I told him then, that I would try it, which enraged him very much; however, out of regard to the ladies, I remained still, and never made any farther demand of my right. Some time afterwards, these friendly ladies asked me what I meant to do with myfelf, and how they could affift me. I thanked them, and faid, if they pleased, I would be their servant; but if not, I had thirty-seven guineas, which would support me for some time, and I would be much obliged to them to recommend me to fome person who would teach me a business whereby I might earn my living. They answered me very politely, that they were forry it did not suit them to take me as their servant, and asked me what business I should like to learn? I faid, hair dreffing. They then promised to assist me in this; and soon after, they recommended me to a gentleman whom I had known before, one Capt. O'Hara, who treated me with much kindness, and procured me a master, a hair-dresser, in Coventry-court, Haymarket, with whom he placed me. I was with this man from September till the February following. In that time we had a neighbour in the same court, who taught the French-horn. He used to blow it so well, that that I was charmed with it, and agreed with him to teach me to blow it. Accordingly he took me in hand, and began to instruct me, and I foon learned all the three parts. I took great delight in blowing on this instrument, the evenings being long; and besides that I was fond of it, I did not like to be idle, and it filled up my vacant hours innocently. At this time also I agreed with the Rev. Mr. Gregory, who lived in the same court, where he kept an academy and an evening-school, to improve me in arithmetic. This hedid as far as Barter and Aligation; fo that all the time I was there I was entirely employed. February 1768, I hired myself to Dr. Charles Irving, in Pall-mall, so celebrated for his successful experiments in making sea-water fresh; and here I had plenty of hair-dressing to improve my hand. This gentleman was an excellent mafter; he was exceedingly kind and good tempered; and allowed me in the evenings to attend my schools, which I esteemed a great bleffing; therefore I thanked God and him for it, and used all my diligence to improve the opportunity. This diligence and attention recommended me to the notice and care of my three preceptors, who on their parts bestowed a great deal of pains in my instruction, and besides were all very kind 40

me. My wages, however, which were by two thirds less than ever I had in my life (for I had only 121. per annum) I foon found would not be fufficient to defray this extraordinary expence of mafters, and my own necessary expences; my old thirty-seven guineas had by this time worn all away to one. I thought it best, therefore, to try the sea again in quest of more money, as I had been bred to it, and had hitherto found the profession of it successful. I had also a very great desire to see Turkey, and I now determined to gratify it. Accordingly, in the month of May 1768, I told the Doctor my wish to go to sea again, to which he made no opposition; and we parted on friendly terms. The same day I went into the city in quest of a master. I was extremely fortunate in my inquiry; for I foon heard of a gentleman who had a ship going to Italy and Turkey, and he wanted a man who could dress hair well. I was overjoyed at this, and went immediately on board of his ship, as I had been directed, which I found to be fitted up with great taste, and I already foreboded no small pleasure in sailing in her. Not finding the gentleman on board, I was directed to his lodgings, where I met with him the next day, and gave him a specimen of my dreffing. He liked it so well that he hired hired me immediately, so that I was perfectly happy; for the ship, master, and voyage, were entirely to my mind. The ship was called the Delawar, and my master's name was John Jolly, a neat, smart, good humoured man, just fuch an one as I wished to serve. We sailed from England in July following, and our voyage was extremely pleasant. We went to Villa Franca, Nice, and Leghorn; and in all these places I was charmed with the richness and beauty of the countries, and struck with the elegant buildings with which they abound. We had always in them plenty of extraordinary good wines and rich fruits, which I was very fond of; and I had frequent occasions of gratifying both my taste and curiosity; for my Captain always lodged on shore in those places, which afforded me opportunities to fee the country around. I also learned navigation of the mate, which I was very fond of. When we left Italy we had delightful failing among the Archipelago islands, and from thence to Smyrna in Turkey. This is a very ancient city; the houses are built of stone, and most of them have graves adjoining to them; fo that they fometimes present the appearance of church-yards. Provisions are very plentiful in this city, and good wine less than a penny a pint. The grapes, pomegranates, and many other fruits, were also the richest and largest I ever saw or tasted. The natives are well looking, and strong made, and treated me always with great civility. In general I believe they are fond of black people; and Teveral of them gave me pressing invitations to stay amongst them, although they keep the Franks, or Christians, separate, and do not fuffer them to dwell immediately amongst them. I was astonished in not seeing women in any of their shops, and very rarely any in the streets; and whenever I did they were covered with a veil from head to foot, fo that I could not see their faces, except when any of them out of curiofity uncovered them to look at me, which they fometimes did. was furprised to see how the Greeks, are, in some measure, kept under by the Turks, as the negroes are in the West Indies by the white people. The less refined Greeks, as I have already hinted, dance here in the same manner as we do in our nation.

On the whole, during our stay here, which was about five months, I liked the place and the Turks extremely well. I could not help observing one very remarkable circumstance there: the tails of the sheep are flat, and so very large, that I have known the tail even of a lamb to weigh from eleven to thirteen pounds.

pounds. The fat of them is very white and rich, and is excellent in puddings, for which it is much used. Our ship being at length richly loaded with filk, and other articles, we failed for England.

In May 1769, foon after our return from Turkey, our ship made a delightful voyage to Oporto in Portugal, were we arrived at the time of the carnival. On our arrival, there were fent on board of us thirty-fix articles to observe, with very heavy penalties if we should break any of them; and none of us even dared to go on board any other veffel, or on shore, till the Inquisition had sent on board and searched for every thing illegal, especially bibles. All we had were produced, and certain other things were fent on shore till the ships were going away; and any person, in whose custody a bible was found concealed, was to be imprisoned and flogged, and sent into slavery for ten years. I saw here many very magnificent fights, particularly the garden of Eden, where many of the clergy and laity went in procession in their several orders with the host, and sung Te Deum. a great curiofity to go into some of their churches, but could not gain admittance without using the necessary sprinkling of holy water at my entrance. From curiosity, and a L₃ wish to be holy, I therefore complied with this ceremony, but its virtues were lost upon me, for I found myself nothing the better for it. This place abounds with plenty of all kinds of provisions. The town is well built and pretty, and commands a fine prospect. Our ship having taken in a load of wine, and other commodities, we sailed for London, and arrived in July following.

Our next voyage was to the Mediterranean. The ship was again got ready, and we sailed in September for Genoa. This is one of the finest cities I ever saw; some of the edifices were of beautiful marble, and made a most noble appearance; and many had very curious fountains before them. The churches were rich and magnificent, and curiously adorned both in the infide and out. But all this grandeur was, in my eyes, difgraced by the galley-flaves, whose condition both there and in other parts of Italy is truly piteous and wretched. After we had stayed there some weeks, during which we bought many different things we wanted, and got them very cheap, we failed to Naples, a charming city, and remarkably clean. The bay is the most beautiful I ever saw; the moles for shipping are excellent. I thought it extraordinary to see grand operas acted here on Sunday nights, and even attended by their Majesties. I too, like these great ones, went to those sights, and vainly ferved God in the day while I thus served mammon effectually at night. While we remained here, there happened an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, of which I had a perfect view. It was extremely awful; and we were so near that the ashes from it used to be thick on our deck. After we had transacted our business at Naples, we sailed with a fair wind once more for Smyrna, where we arrived in December. A seraskier, or officer, took a liking to me here, and wanted me to stay, and offered me two wives; however I refused the temptation, thinking one was as much as some could manage, and more than others would venture on. The merchants here travel in caravans, in large companies. I have feen many caravans from India, with fome hundreds of camels laden with different goods. The people of these caravans are, quite brown. Among other articles, they brought with them a great quantity of locusts, which are a kind of pulse, sweet and pleasant to the palate, and in shape resembling French beans, but longer. Each kind of goods is fold in a street by itself, and I always found the Turks very honest in their dealings. They let no Christians into their mosques, or L₄

churches, for which I was very forry; as Iwas always fond of going to see the different modes of worship of the people wherever I went. The plague broke out while we were in Smyrna, and we stopped taking goods intothe ship till it was over. She was then richly laden, and we sailed in abour March 1770 for England. One day in our passage we met with an accident which was near burning the ship. A black cook, in melting some fat, overset the pan into the fire under the deck, which immediately began to blaze, and the flame went up very high under the With the fright, the poor cook became almost white, and altogether speechless. Happily however we got the fire out without doing much mischief. After various delaysin this passage, which was tedious, we arrived in Standgate creek in July; and, at the latter end of the year, some new event occurred, so that my noble captain, the ship, and I, all se-

In April 1771, I shipped myself as a steward with Capt. William Robertson of the ship Grenada Planter, once more to try my fortune in the West Indies; and we sailed from London for Madeira, Barbadoes, and the Grenades. When we were at this last place, having some goods to sell, I met once more

with my former kind of West India customers.

A white man, an islander, bought some goods of me to the amount of fome pounds, and made me many fair promises as usual, but without any intention of paying me. He had likewise bought goods from some more of our people, whom he intended to serve in the same manner; but he still amused us with However, when our ship was loaded and near failing this honest buyer discovered no intention or fign of paying for any thing he had bought of us; but on the contrary, when I asked him for my money he threatened me and another black man he had bought goods of, so that we found we were like to get more blows than payment. On this we went to complain to one Mr. M'Intosh, a justice of the peace; we told his worship of the man's villainous tricks, and begged that he would be kind enough to see us redressed: but being negroes, although free, we could not get any remedy; and our ship being then just upon the point of sailing, we knew not how to help ourselves, though we thought it hard to lose our property in this manner. Luckily for us, however, this man was also indebted to three white failors, who could not get a farthing from him; they therefore readily joined L 5 ·

us, and we all went together in fearch of him. When we found where he was, we took him out of a house and threatened him with vengeance; on which, finding he was likely to be handled roughly, the rogue offered each of us some small allowance, but nothing near our demands. This exasperated us much; and some were for cutting his ears off; but he begged hard for mercy, which was at last granted him, after we had entirely stripped him. We then let him go, for which he thanked us, glad to get off so easily, and ran into the bushes, after having wished us a good voyage. We then repaired on board, and shortly after set sail for England. I cannot help remarking here a very narrow escape we had from being blown up, owing to a piece of negligence of mine. Just as our ship was under fail, I went down under the cabin to do fome bufiness, and had a lighted candle in my hand, which, in my hurry, without thinking I held in a barrel of gunpowder. mained in the powder until it was near catching fire, when fortunately I observed it, and snatched it out in time, and providentially no harm happened; but I was so overcome with terror that I immediately fainted at this deliverance.

In twenty-eight days time we arrived in England,

England, and I got clear of this ship. But, being still of a roving disposition, and desirous of seeing as many different parts of the world as I could, I shipped myself soon after, in the same year, as steward on board of a fine large ship, called the Jamaica, Captain David Watt; and we failed for England in December 1771 for Nevis and Jamaica. I found Jamaica to be a very fine, large island, well peopled, and the most considerable of the West India islands. There were a vast number of negroes here, whom I found, as usual, exceedingly imposed upon by the white people, and the flaves punished as in the other islands. There are negroes whose business it is to flog slaves; they go about to different people for employment, and the usual pay is from one to four bits. I faw many cruel punishments inflicted on the flaves in the short time I stayed here. In particular I was present when a poor fellow was tied up and kept hanging by the wrifts at some distance from the ground, and then some half hundred weights were fixed to his ancles, in which posture he was flogged most uninercifully. There were also, as I heard, two different masters noted for cruelty on the island, who had staked up two negroes naked, and in two hours the vermin stung them to death. heard a gentleman, I well knew, tell my cap-L 6 tain tain that he passed sentence on a negro man? to be burnt alive for attempting to poison an overseer. I pass over numerous other instances, in order to relieve the reader by a milder scene of roguery. Before I had been long on the island, one Mr. Smith, at Port Morant, bought goods of me to the amount of twenty-five pounds sterling; but when I demanded payment from him, he was going each time to beat me, and threatened that he would put me in goal. One time he would fay I was going to fet his house on fire; at another, he would swear I was going to run away with his flaves. I was aftonished at this usage from a person who was in the situation of a gentleman, but I had no alternative, and was therefore obliged to submit. When I came to Kingston, I was surprised to see the number of Africans who were affembled together on Sundays; particularly at a large commodious place, called Spring Path. Here each different nation of Africa meet and dance after the manner of their own country. They still retain most of their native customs: they bury their dead, and put victuals, pipes and to-bacco, and other things, in the grave with the corple, in the same manner as in Africa. Our ship having got her loading, we failed for London, where we arrived in the August following. On my return to London, I waited on my old and good master, Dr. Irving, who made me an offer of his service again. Being now tired of the sea I gladly accepted it. I was very happy in living with this gentleman once more; during which time we were daily employed in reducing old Neptune's dominions by purifying the briny element, and making it fresh. Thus I went on till May 1773, when I was roused by the sound of same to seek new adventures, and find, towards the North Pole, what our Creator never intended we should, a passage to India. An expedition was now fitting out to explore a north-east passage, conducted by the Honourable Constantine John Phipps, late Lord Mulgrave, in his Majesty's floop of war the Race Horse. My master being anxious for the reputation of this adventure, we therefore prepared every thing for our voyage, and I attended him on board the Race Horse, the 24th day of May 1773. We proceeded to Sheerness, where we were joined by his Majesty's sloop the Carcass, commanded by Captain Lutwidge. On the 4th of June we failed towards our destined place, the pole; and on the 15th of the same month we were off Shetland. On this day I had a great and unexpected deliverance from an accident which was near blowing up the ship, and destroying the crew, which made me ever after during the voyage uncommonly cautious. The ship was so filled that there was very little room on board for any one, which placed me in a very aukward fituation. I had refolved to keep a journal of this singular and interesting voyage; and I had no other place for this purpose but a little cabin, or the doctor's storeroom, where I flept. This little place was stuffed with all manner of combustibles, particularly with tow and aquafortis, and many other dangerous things. It happened in the evening, as I was writing my journal, that I had occasion to take the candle out of the lanthorn, and a spark unfortunately having touched a fingle thread of the tow, all the rest caught the flame and immediately the whole was in a blaze. I faw nothing but present death before me, and expected to be the first to perish in the flames. In a moment the alarm was spread, and many people who were near ran to affift in putting out the fire. All this time I was in the very midst of the flames; my thirt, and my handkerchief on my neck, were burnt, and I was almost smothered with the smoke. However, through God's mercy, as I was nearly giving up all hopes, some people brought blankets and matraffes, and threw them on the flames, by which means, in a short a fhort time, the fire was put out. I was feverely repremanded and menaced by such of the officers who knew it, and strictly charged never more to go there with a light: and, indeed, even my own fears made me give heed to this command for a little time; but at last, not being able to write my journal in any other part of the ship, I was tempted again to venture by stealth with a light in the same cabin, though not without considerable fear and dread on my mind. On the 20th of June, we began to use Dr. Irvingsapparatus for making falt water fresh; I used to attend the distillery: I frequently purified from twentyfix to forty gallons a-day. The water thus . distilled was perfectly pure, well tasted, and free from falt; and was used on various occasions on board the ship. On the 28th of June, being in lat. 78, we made Greenland, where I was surprised to see the sun did not set. The weather now became extremely cold; and as we failed between north and east, which was our course, we saw many very high and curious mountains of ice; and also a great number of very large whales, which used to come close to our ship, and blow the water up to a very great height in the air. One morning we had vast quantities of sea-horses about the thip, which neighed exactly like any other horses.

We fired some harpoon guns amongst them, inorder to take some, but we could not get any. The 20th, the captain of a Greenland ship came on board, and told us of three ships that were lost in the ice; however we still held on our course till July the 11th, when we were stopt by one compact impenetrable body of ice. We ran along it from east to west above ten degrees; and on the 27th we got as far north as 80,37; and in 19 or 20 degrees east longitude of London. On the 29th and 30th of July, we saw one continued plain of smooth unbroken ice, bounded only by the horizon; and we fastened to a piece of ice that was eight yards eleven inches thick. We had generally funshine, and constant daylight; which gave cheerfulness and novelty to the whole of this striking, grand, and uncommon scene; and, to heighten it still more, the reflection of the fun from the ice gave the clouds a most beautiful appearance. We killed many different animals at this time, and, among the rest nine bears. Though they had nothing in their paunches but water, yet they were all very fat. We used to decoy them to the ship sometimes by burning feathers or skins. I thought them coarse eating, but some of the ship's company relished them very much. Some of our people once, in a boat, fired at and wounded wounded a sea-horse, which dived immediately; and in a little time after brought up with it a number of others. They all joined in an attack upon the boat, and were with difficulty prevented from staving or oversetting her; but a boat from the Carcass having come to affift ours, and joined it, they dispersed, after having wrested an oar from one of the men. One of the ship's boats had before been attacked in the same manner, but happily no harm was done. Though we wounded feveral of these animals we never got but one. We remained hereabouts until the 1st of August; when the two ships got completely fastened in the ice, occasioned by the loose ice that set in from the sea. This made our situation very dreadful and alarming; so that on the 7th day we were in very great apprehension of having the ships squeezed to pieces. The officers now held a council to know what was best for us to do in order to fave our lives; and it was determined that we should endeavour to escape by dragging our boats along the ice towards the sea; which, however, was farther off than any of us thought. This determination filled us with extreme dejection, and confounded us with despair; for we had very little prospect of escaping with life. However, we sawed fome of the ice about the ships, to keep it from hurting them; and thus kept them in a kind of pond. We then began to drag the boat as well as we could towards the fea; but, after two or three days labour, we made very little progress; so that some of our hearts totally failed us, and I really began to give up myself for lost, when I saw our surrounding calamities. While we were at this hard labour, I once fell into a pond we had made amongst fome loofe ice, and was very near being drowned; but providentially some people were near, who gave me immediate affistance, and thereby I escaped drowning. Our deplorable condition, which kept up the constant apprehension of our perishing in the ice, brought me gradually to think of eternity in such a manner as I never had done before. I had the fears of death hourly upon me, and shuddered at the thoughts of meeting the grim king of terrors in the natural state I then was in, and was exceedingly doubtful of a happy eternity if I should die in it. I had no hopes of my life being prolonged for any time; for we saw that our existence could not be long on the ice after leaving the ships, which were now out of fight, and some miles from the boats. Our appearance now became truly lamentable; pale dejection seized every countenance; many, who had been before blasphemers, in this our distress began to call on the good God of heaven for his help; and in the time of our utter need he heard us, and against hope, or human probability, delivered us! It was the eleventh day of the ship's being thus fastened, and the fourth of our drawing the boats in this manner, that the wind changed to the E. N. E. The weather immediately became mild, and the ice broke towards the sea, which was to the S. W. of us. Many of us on this got on board again, and with all our might we hove the ships into every open water we could find, and made all the sail on them in our power: now, having a prospect of success, we made fignals for the boats and the remainder of the people. This seemed to us like a reprieve from death; and happy was the man who could first get on board of any ship, or the first boat he could meet. We then proceeded in this manner till we got into open water again, which we accomplished in about thirty hours, to our infinite joy and gladness of heart. As soon as we were out of danger, we came to anchorandrefitted; and on the 19th of August we failed from this uninhabited extremity of the world, where the inhospitable climate affords fords neither food nor shelter, and not a tree or shrub of any kind grows amongst its barren rocks; but all is one desolate and expanded waste of ice, which even the constant beams of the fun for fix months in the year cannot penetrate or dissolve. The sun now being on the decline, the days shortened as we sailed to the fouthward; and, on the 28th, in latitude 73, it was dark by ten o'clock at night. September the 10th, in latitude 58-59, we met a very fevere gale of wind and high feas, and shipped a great deal of water in the space of ten hours. This made us work exceedingly hard at all our pumps a whole day; and one fea, which struck the ship with more force than any thing I ever met with of the kind before, laid her under water for some time. fo that we thought she would have gone down. Two boats were washed from the booms, and the long-boat from the chucks: moveable things on the decks were also washed away, among which were many curious things, of different kinds, which we had brought from Greenland; and we obliged, in order to lighten the ship, to toss some of our guns overboard. We saw a ship at the same time in very great distress, and her masts were gone; but we were unable to affift affift her. We now lost fight of the Carcass till the 26th, when we saw land about Orfordness, off which place she joined us. From thence we sailed for London, and on the 30th came up to Deptford. And thus ended our Arctic voyage, to the no small joy of all on board, after having been absent four months: in which time, at the imminent hazard of our lives, we explored nearly as far towards the Pole as 81 degrees north, and 20 degrees east longitude; being much farther, by all accounts, than any navigator had ever ventured before; in which we fully proved the impracticability of finding a passage that way to India.

CHAP. III.

The author leaves Dostor Irving, and engages on board a Turkey ship—Account of a black man's being kidnapped on board, and sent to the West Indies, and the author's fruitless endeavours to procure his freedom—Some account of the manner of the author's conversion to the Faith of Jesus Christ.

Our voyage to the North Pole being ended, I returned to London with Dr. Irving, with whom I continued for some time, during which I began seriously to reslect on the dangers I had escaped, particularly those of my last voyage, which made a lasting impression on my mind; and, by the grace of God, proved asterwards a mercy to me: it caused me to reslect deeply on my eternal state, and to seek the Lord with full purpose of heart ere it be too late. I rejoiced greatly; and heartily thanked the Lord for directing me to London, where I was determined to work out my own salvation, and, in so doing, procure procure a title to heaven; being the result of a mind blinded by ignorance and fin.

In process of time I left my master, Doctor Irving, the purifier of waters. I lodged in Coventry-court, Haymarket, where I was continually oppressed and much concerned about the salvation of my soul, and was determined (in my own strength) to be a firstrate Christian. I used every means for this purpose; and, not being able to find any perion amongst those with whom I was then acquainted that acquiesced with me in point of religion, or, in Scripture-language, that would shew me any good, I was much dejected, and knew not where to feek relief; however, I first frequented the neighbouring churches, S. James's, and others, two or three times a day, for many weeks: still I came away disfatisfied: fomething was wanting that | could not obtain, and I really found more heart-felt relief in reading my Bible at home than in attending the church; and, being resolved to be faved, I pursued other methods. went among the people called Quakers, whose meeting at times was in silence, and I remained as much in the dark as ever. I then searched into the Roman Catholic principles, but was not in the least edified. I at length had recourse to the Jews, which availed me nothing.

nothing, as the fear of eternity daily haraffed my mind, and I knew not where to feek shelter from the wrath to come. However, this was my conclusion, at all events, to read the Four Evangelists, and whatever sect or party · I found adhering thereto, such I would join. Thus I went on heavily without any guide to direct me the way that leadeth to eternal life. I asked different people questions about the manner of going to heaven, and was told different ways. Here I was much staggered, and could not find any at that time more righteous than myself, or indeed so much inclined to devotion. I thought we should not all be faved (this is agreeable to the Holy Scriptures), nor would all be damned. I found none among the circle of my acquaintance that kept wholly the Ten Commandments. So righteous was I in my own eyes, that I was convinced I excelled many of them in that point, by keeping eight out of ten; and finding those, who in general termed themselves Christians, not so honest or so good in their morals as the Turks, I really thought the Turks were in a safer way of salvation than my neighbours; so that between hopes and fears I went on, and the chief comforts I enjoyed were in the musical French-horn, which I then practifed, and also dressing of hair. Such

Such was my fituation fome months, experiencing the dishonesty of many people here. I determined at last to set out for Turkey, and there to end my days. It was now early in the spring 1774. I sought for a master, and found a captain John Hughes, commander of a ship called Anglicania, fitting out in the river Thames, and bound to Smyrna in Turkey. I shipped myself with him as a steward; at the same time I recommended to him a very clever black man, John Annis, as a cook. This man was on board the ship near two months doing his duty: he hadformerly lived many years with Mr. William Kirkpatrick, a gentleman of the island of Sr. Kitt's, from whom he parted by confent, though he afterwards tried many schemes to inveigle the poor man. He had applied to many captains, who traded to St. Kitt's, to trepan him; and, when all their attempts and schemes of kidnapping proved abortive, Mr. Kirkpatrick came to our ship at Union-stairs, on Easter Monday, April the 4th, with two wherry-boats and fix men, having learned that the man was on board, and tied, and forcibly took him away from the ship, in the presence of the crew and the chief mate, who had detained him after he had information to come away. I believe this was a combined M piece piece of buliness; but, be that as it may, it certainly reflected great difgrace on the mate, and captain also, who, although they had defired the oppressed man to stay on board, yet notwithstanding this vile act on the man who had served him, he did not in the least assist to recover him, or pay me a farthing of his wages, which was about five pounds. I proved the only friend he had, who attempted to regain him his liberty, if possible, having known the want of liberty myself. I sent as soon as I could to Gravesend, and got knowledge of the ship in which he was; but unluckily she had sailed the first tide after he was put on board. My intention was then immediately to apprehend Mr. Kirkpatrick, who was about fetting off for Scotland; and, having obtained a babeas corpus for him, and got a tipstaff to go with me to St. Paul's Church-yard, where he lived, he, fuspecting fomething of this kind, set a watch to look out. My being known to them, obliged me to use the following deception: I whitened my face, that they might not know me, and this had the defired effect. He did not go out of his house that night, and next morning I contrived a well-plotted stratagem, notwithstanding he had a gentleman in his house to personate him. My direction to the tipstaff had the defired effect; he got admittance, tance into the house, and conducted him to a Judge according to the writ. When he came there, his plea was, that he had not the body in custody, on which he was admitted to bail. proceeded immediately to that well-known philanthropist, Granville Sharp, Esq. who received me with the utmost kindness, and gave me every instruction that was needful on the occasion. I left him in full hope that I should gain the unhappy man his liberty, with the warmest sense of gratitude towards Mr. Sharp for his kindness; but, alas! my attorney proved unfaithful; he took my money, loft me many months employ, and did not do the least good in the cause; and when the poor man arrived at St. Kitt's, he was, according to custom, staked to the ground with four pins through a cord, two on his wrifts, and two on his ancles, was cut and flogged most unmercifully, and afterwards loaded cruelly with irons about his neck. I had two very moving letters from him while he was in this fituation; and I made attempts to go after him at a great hazard, but was fadly disappointed: I also was told of it by some very respectable samilies now in London, who saw him in St. Kitt's in the same state, in which he remained till kind death released him out of the hands of his tyrants. During this disagreeable busineis.

ness I was under strong convictions of sin, and thought that my state was worse than any man's; my mind was unaccountably difturbed; I often wished for death, though at the fame time convinced I was altogether unprepared for that awful fummons: fuffering much by villains in the late cause, and being much concerned about the state of my foul, these things (but particularly the latter) brought me very low; so that I became a burden to myself, and viewed all things around me as emptiness and vanity, which could give no fatisfaction to a troubled conscience. again determined to go to Turkey, and re-folved, at that time, never more to return to England. I engaged as steward on board a Turkeyman (the Wester Hall, Capt. Lina), but was prevented by means of my late captain, Mr. Hughes, and others. All this appeared to be against me, and the only comfort I then experienced was in reading the Holy Scriptures, where I faw that there is no new thing under the fun,' Eccles. i. 9.; and what was appointed for me I must submit to. I continued to travel in much heaviness, and frequently murmured against the Almighty, particularly in his providential dealings; and awful to think! I began to blaspheme, and wished often to be any thing but a human being. In these severe conflicts the Lord answered me by awful visions of the night, when deep sleep salleth upon men, 'in slumberings upon the bed,' Job, xxxiii. 15. He was pleased, in much mercy, to give me to see, and in some measure understand, the great and awful scene of the Judgmentday, that 'no unclean person, no unholy thing, can enter into the kingdom of God, Eph. v. 5. I would then, if it had been posfible, have changed my nature with the meanest worm on the earth, and was ready to say to the mountains and rocks, 'fall on "me,' Rev. vi. 16.; but all in vain. I then, in the greatest agony, requested the divine Creator, that he would grant me a small space of time to repent of my follies and vile iniquities, which I felt were grievous. The Lord, in his manifold mercies, was pleased to grant my request, and being yet in a state of time, the sense of God's mercies were so great on my mind when I awoke, that my strength entirely failed me for many minutes, and I was exceedingly weak. This was the first spiritual mercy I ever was fensible of, and being on praying ground, as foon as I recovered a little strength, and got out of bed and dressed myself, I invoked heaven from my inmost soul, and fervently begged that God M 3

would never again permit me to blaspheme his most holy name. The Lord, who is longsuffering, and sull of compassion to such poor rebels as we are, condescended to hear and anfwer. I felt that I was altogether unholy, and faw clearly what a bad use I had made of the faculties I was endowed with: they were given me to glorify God with; I thought, therefore, I had better want them here, and enter into life eternal, than abuse them and be cast into hell fire. I prayed to be directed, if there were any holier persons than those with whom I was acquainted, that the Lord would point them out to me. I appealed to the Searcher of hearts, whether I did not wife to love him more, and ferve him better, Notwithstanding all this, the reader may easily discern, if a believer, that I was still in nature's darkness. At length I hated the house in which I lodged, because God's most holy name was blasphemed in it; then I saw the word of God verified, viz. Before the call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

I had a great defire to read the Bible the whole day at home; but not having a convenient place for retirement, I left the house in the day, rather than stay amongst the wicked ones; and that day, as I was walking, it pleased pleased God to direct me to a house where. there was an old fea-faring man, who experienced much of the love of God shed abroads in his heart. He began to discourse with me; and, as I defined to love the Lord, his converfation rejoiced me greatly; and indeed, I had never heard before the love of Christ to believers fet forth in such a manner, and in so clear a point of view. Here I had more queftions to put to the man than his time would permit him to answer: and in that memorable hour there came in a Dissenting Minister; he joined our discourse, and asked me some few questions; among others, where I heard the gospel preached? I knew not what he meant by hearing the gospel; I told him I had read the gospel: and he asked me where I went to church, or whether I went at all, or not? To which I replied, I attended St. ' James's, St. Martin's, and St. Ann's, Soho.' So,' faid he, 'you are a churchman?' I answered. I was. He then invited me to a love-feast at his chapel that evening. cepted the offer, and thanked him; and foon after he went away, I had some further discourse with the old Christian, added to some profitable reading, which made me exceedingly happy. When I left him he reminded me of coming to the feast; I affured him I M 4 would

would be there. Thus we parted, and I weighed over the heavenly conversation that had passed between these two men, which cheered my then heavy and drooping spirit more than any thing I had met with for many months. However, I thought the time long in going to my supposed banquet. I also wished much for the company of these friendly men; their company pleased much; and I thought the gentleman very kind in asking me, a stranger, to a seast; but how fingular did it appear to me, to have it in a chapel! When the wished-for hour came I went, and happily the old man was there, who kindly feated me, as he belonged to the place. I was much aftonished to see the place filled with people, and no figns of eating and drinking. There were many ministers in the company. At last they began by giving out hymns, and between the finging, the ministers engaged in prayer: in short, I knew not what to make of this fight, having never feen any thing of the kind in my life before now. Some of the guests began to speak their experience, agreeable to what I read in the Scriptures: much was said by every speaker of the providence of God, and his unspeakable mercies to each of them. This I knew in a great measure, and could most heartily join them. But when they spoke of a future state, they seemed to be altogether certain or their calling and election of God; and that no one could ever separate them from the love of Christ, or pluck them out of his hands. This filled me with utter consternation intermingled with admiration. I was fo amazed as not to know what to think of the company; my heart was attracted, and my affections were enlarged; I wished to be as happy as them, and was perfuaded in my mind that they were different from the world that lieth in wickedness,' 1 John, v. 19. Their language and finging, &c. did well harmonize; I was entirely overcome, and wished to live and die thus. Lastly, some persons in the place produced some neat baskets full of buns, which they distributed about; and each person communicated with his neighbour, and fipped water out of different mugs, which they handed about to all who were present. This kind of Christian fellowship I had never feen, nor ever thought of seeing on earth; it fully reminded me of what I had read in the Holy Scriptures of the primitive Christians, who loved each other and broke bread; in partaking of it, even from house to house. This entertainment (which lasted about four hours) ended in finging and prayer. It was M 5

the first soul-seast I ever was present at. This last twenty four hours produced me things, spiritual and temporal, sleeping and waking, judgment and mercy, that I could not but admire the goodness of God, in directing the blind, blasphemous sinner in the path that he knew not, even among the just; and instead of judgment, he has shewed mercy, and will hear and answer the prayers and supplications of every returning prodigal:

O! to grace how great a debtor Daily I'm confirain'd to be.

After this I was resolved to win heaven, if possible; and if I perished, I thought it should be at the feet of Jesus, in praying to him for falvation. After having been an eye-witners to some of the happiness which attended those who feared God, I knew not how, with any propriety, to return to my lodgings, where the name of God was continually profaned, at which I felt the greatest horror; I paused in my mind for some time, not knowing what to do; whether to hire a bed elsewhere, or go home again. At last, fearing an evil report might arise, I went home, with a farewell to card-playing and vain jefting, &c. I faw that time was very short, eternity long, and very 'near; and I viewed those persons alone blessed, who

who were found ready at midnight call, or when the Judge of all, both quick and dead, cometh.

The next day I took courage, and went to Holborn, to fee my new and worthy acquaintance, the old man, Mr. C--; he, with his wife, a gracious woman, were at work at filk-weaving; they feemed mutually happy, and both quite glad to fee me, and I more fo to fee them. I fat down, and we converted much about foul matters, &c. Their difcourse was amazingly delightful, edifying, and pleafant. I knew not at last how to leave this agreeable pair, till time fummoned me away, As I was going they lent me a little book, entitled "The Conversion of an Indian." was in questions and aniwers. The poor man came over the fea to London, to inquire after Christian's God, who (through mercy) he found, and had not his journey in vain. The above book was of great use to me, and at that time was a means of strengthening my faith; however, in parting, they both invited me to call on them when I pleased. This delighted me, and I took care to make all the improvement from it I could; and to far I thanked God for fuch company and defires. I prayed that the many evils I felt within might be done away, and that I might M 6 be be weaned from my former carnal acquaintances. This was quickly heard and answered, and I was foon connected with those whom the Scripture calls the excellent of the earth. heard the gospel preached, and the thoughts of my heart and actions were laid open by the preachers, and the 'way of falvation by Christ alone was evidently set forth. Thus I went on happily for near two months; and I once heard, during this period, a reverend gentleman, Mr. G. speak of a man who had departed this life in full affurance of his going to glory, I was much aftonished at the affertion; and did very deliberately inquire how he could get at this knowledge. I was answered fully, agreeably to what I read in the oracles of truth; and was told also, that if I did not experience the new birth, and the pardon of my fins, through the blood of Christ, before I died, I could not enter the kingdom of heaved. I knew-not what to think of this report, as I thought I kept eight commandments out of ten; then my worthy interpreter told me I did not do it, nor could I; and he added, that no man ever did or could keep the commandments, without offending in one point. thought this founded very strange, and puzzled me much for many weeks; for I thought it a hard faying. I then asked my friend, Mr.

L-d, who was a clerk of a chapel, why the commandments of God were given, if we could not be faved by them? To which he replied. The law his a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ,' who alone could, and did keep the commandments, and fulfilled all their requirements for his elect people, even those to whom he had given a living faith, and the fins of those chosen vessels were already atoned for and forgiven them whilft living *; and if I did not experience the same before my exit, the Lord would fay at that great day to me, Go, ye curfed,' &c. &c. for God would appear faithful in his judgments to the wicked, as he would be faithful in shewing mercy to those who were ordained to it before the world was; therefore Christ Jesus seemed to be all in all to that man's foul. I was much wounded at this discourse, and brought into such a dilemma as I never expected. I asked him, if be was to die that moment, whether he was fure to enter the kingdom of God; and added, Do you know that your fins are forgiven 'you?' he answered in the affirmative. confusion, anger, and discontent seized me, and I staggered much at this fort of doctrine; it brought me to a stand, not knowing which to believe, whether falvation by works, or by faith only in Christ. I requested him to tell me me how I might know when my fins were forgiven me. He affured me he could not. and that none but God alone could do this. I told him it was very mysterious; but he faid it was really matter of fact, and quoted many portions of scripture immediately to the point, to which I could make no reply. He then defired me to pray to God to shew me these things. I answered that I prayed to God every day. He said, 'I perceive you ' are a churchman.' I answered, I He then entreated me to beg of God, to shew me what I was, and the true state of my foul. I thought the prayer very short and odd; fo we parted for that time. I weighed all these things well over, and could not help thinking how it was possible for a man to know that his fins were forgiven him in this life. I wished that God would reveal this felf-fame thing unto me. In a short time after this I went to Westminster chapel; the Reverend Mr. P--- preached from Lam. iii. 39. It was a wonderful sermon; he clearly shewed that a living man had no cause to complain for the punishments of his fins; he evidently justified the Lord in all his dealings with the fons of men; he also shewed the justice of God in the eternal punishment of the wicked and impenitent. The discourse seemed to me like a two-edged sword cutting allways; it affored me much joy, intermingled with many fears about my foul; and when it was ended, he gave it out that he intended the enfuing week, to examine all those who meant to attend the Lord's Table. thought much of my good works, and at the same time was doubtful of my being a proper object to receive the facrament: I was full of meditation till the day of examining. ever, I went to the chapel, and, though much distressed, I addressed the reverend gentleman, thinking, if I was not right, he would endeavour to convince me of it. When I converfed with him, the first thing he asked me, was. What I knew of Christ? I told him I believed in him, and had been baptized in his 'Then,' faid he, 'when were you brought to the knowledge of God? and how were you convinced of fin? I knew not what he meant by these questions; I told him I kept eight commandments out of ten; but that I formetimes fwore on board ship, and formetimes when on shore, and broke the sabbath. He then asked me if I could read; I answered, 'Yes.'-'Then,' said he, 'do you' onot read in the Bible, he that offends in one 'point is guilty of all?' I faid, 'Yes.' Then he affured me, that one sin unatoned for was as fufficient to damn a foul, as one leak was to fink fink a ship. Here I was struck with awe; for the minister exhorted me much, and reminded me of the shortness of time, and the length of eternity, and that no unregenerate soul, or any thing unclean, could enter the kingdom of Heaven.

He did not admit me as a communicant; but recommended me to read the Scriptures, and hear the word preached; not to neglect fervent prayer to God, who has promised to hear the supplications of those who seek him in godly fincerity; fo I took my leave of him, with many thanks, and refolved to follow his advice, so far as the Lord would condescend to During this time I was out of enable me. employ, nor was I likely to get a fituation fuitable for me, which obliged me to go once more to fea. I engaged as steward of a ship called the Hope, Captain Richard Strange. bound from London to Cadiz in Spain. short time after I was on board, I heard the name of God much blasphemed, and I feared greatly left I should eatch the horrible infection. I thought if I finned again, after having life and death fet evidently before me, I should certainly go to hell. My mind was uncommonly chagrined, and I murmured much at God's providential dealings with me, and was discontented with the commandments, that I could not be saved by what I had done; I hated all things, and wished I had never been born; confusion seized me, and I wished to be annihilated. One day I was standing on the very edge of the stern of the ship, thinking to drown myself; but this scripture was instantly impressed on my mind, 'That no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him,' iii. 15. Then I paused, and thought myself the unhappiest man living. Again, I was convinced that the Lord was better to me than I deserved, and I was better off in the world than many. After this I began to fear death; I fretted, mourned, and prayed, till I became a burden to others, but more so to myself. At length I concluded to beg my bread on shore, rather than go again to sea amongst a people who feared not God, and I entreated the captain three different times to discharge me; he would not, but each time gave me greater and greater encouragement to continue with him, and all on board shewed me very great civility: notwithstanding all this I was unwilling to embark again. At last some of my religious friends advised me, by saying it was my lawful calling, consequently it was my duty to obey, and that God was not confined to place, &c. &c. particularly Mr. G. S. the governor of Tothill-fields Bridewell, who pitied my my case, and read the eleventh chapter of the Hebrews to me, with exhortations. He prayed for me, and I believed that he prevailed on my behalf, as my burden was then greatly removed, and I found a heartfelt refignation to the will of God. The good man gave me a pocket Bible, and Allein's Alarm to the Unconverted. We parted, and the next day I went on board again. We failed for Spain. and I found favour with the captain. It was the fourth of the month of September when we failed from London; we had a delightful voyage to Cadiz, where we arrived the twenty-third of the same month. The place is strong, commands a fine prospect, and is very rich. The Spanish galleons frequent that port, and some arrived whilst we were there. I had many opportunities of reading the Scriptures. I wrestled hard with God in fervent prayers, who had declared in his word that he would hear the groanings and deep fighs of the poor in spirit. I found this verified to my utter aftonishment and comfort in the following manner: On the morning of the 6th of October, (I pray you to attend) all that day, I thought that I should either see or hear fomething supernatural. I had a secret impulse on my mind of something that was to take place,* which drove me continually * See page 101.

for that time to a throne of grace. It pleased God to enable me to wrestle with him, as Jacob did: I prayed that if sudden death were to happen, and I perished, it might be at Christ's feet.

In the evening of the fame day, as I was reading and meditating on the fourth chapter of the Acts, twelfth verse, under the solemn apprehensions of eternity, and reflecting on my past actions, I began to think I had lived a moral life, and that I had a proper ground to believe I had an interest in the divine favour; but still meditating on the subject, not knowing whether falvation was to be had partly for our own good deeds, or folely as the sovereign gift of God;-in this deep consternation the Lord was pleased to break in upon my foul with his bright beams of heavenly light; and in an instant, as it were, removing the veil, and letting light into a dark place, I saw clearly, with the eye of faith, the crucified Saviour, bleeding on the cross on mount Calvary: the Scriptures became an unsealed book, I saw myself a condemned criminal under the law, which came with its full force to my conscience, and when 'the commandment came, sin revived, and I' 'died.' I saw the Lord Jesus Christ in his humiliation, loaded and bearing my reproach, fin, and shame. I then clearly perceived, that by the deeds of the law no flesh living could be justified. I was then convinced, that by the first Adam sin came, and by the second Adam (the Lord Jesus Christ) all that are faved must be made alive. It was given me at that time to know what it was to be born again, John, iii. 5. I faw the eighth chapter to the Romans, and the doctrines of God's decrees, verified agreeable to his eternal, everlasting, and unchangeable purposes. word of God was sweet to my taste, yea fweeter than honey and the honey comb. Christ was revealed to my soul as the chiefest among ten thousand. These heavenly moments were really as life to the dead, and what John calls an earnest of the Spirit*. This was indeed unspeakable, and, I firmly believe, undeniable by many. Now every leading providential circumstance that happened to me, from the day I was taken from my parents to that hour, was then in my view, as if it had but just then occurred. I was sensible of the invisible hand of God, which guided and protected me when in truth I knew it not: still the Lord purfued me although I flighted and difregarded it; this mercy melted me down. When I confidered my poor wretched state I wept, seeing what a great debtor I was to sovereign fiee grace. Now the Ethiopian was willing to be faved by Jesus Christ, the sinners's only surety, and also to rely on none other person or thing for Self was obnoxious, and good works he had none, for it is God that worketh in us both to will and to do. Oh! the amazing things of that hour can never be told—it was joy in the Holy Ghost! I felt an astonishing change; the burden of sin, the gasping jaws of hell, and the fears of death, that weighed me down before, now lost their horror; indeed I thought death would now be the best earthly friend I ever had. Such were my grief and joy, as I believe, are seldom experienced. I was bathed in tears, and faid What am I, that God should thus look on me the vilest or sinners? I felt a deep concern for my mother and friends, which occasioned me to pray with fresh ardour; and in the abyss of thought, I viewed the unconverted people of the world in a very awful state, being without God and without hope.

It pleased God to pour out on me the spirit of prayer and the grace of supplication, so that in loud acclamations I was enabled to praise and glorify his most holy name. When I got out of the cabin, and told some of the people what the Lord had done for me, alas, who could understand me or believe my report!-None but to whom the arm of the Lord was revealed. I became a barbarian to them in talking of the love of Christ: his name was to me as ointment poured forth; indeed it was fweet to my foul, but to them a rock of offence. I thought my case singular, and every hour a day until I came to London, for I much longed to be with some to whom I could tell of the wonders of God's love towards me, and join in prayer to him whom my foul leved and thirsted after. I had uncommon commotions within, such as few can tell aught about. Now the Bible was my only companion and comfort; I prized it much, with many thanks to God that I could read it for myself, and was not left to be tossed about or led by man's devices and notions. worth of a foul cannot be told.-May the Lord give the reader an understanding in this. Whenever I looked in the Bible I saw things new, and many texts were immediately applied to me with great comfort; for I knew that to me was the word of falvation fent. Sure I was that the Spirit which indited the word opened my heart to receive the truth of it as it is in Jesus—that the same Spirit

Spirit enabled me to act with faith upon the promifes which were precious to me, and enabled me to believe the falvation of my foul. By free grace I was perfuaded that I had a part and lot in the first resurrection, and was enlightened with the 'light of the living,' Job, xxxiii. 30. I wished for a man of God with whom I might converse: my foul was like the chariots of Aminidab, Canticles vi. 12. These, among others, were the precious promifes that were so powerfully applied to me: All things whatfoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive, Matt. xxi. 22. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give 'unto you,' John xiv. 27. I saw the blessed Redeemer to be the fountain of life, and the well of falvation. I experienced him to be all in all; he had brought me by a way that I knew not, and he had made crooked paths straight. Then in his name I set up my Ebenezer, faying, Hitherto he hath helped me: and could fay to the finners about me, Behold, what a Saviour I have; Thus I was, by the teaching of that all glorious Deity, the great One in Three, and Three in One, confirmed in the truths of the Bible, those oracles of everlasting truth, on which every foul living . must stand or fall eternally, agreeable to Acts, iv. 12. Neither is there falvation other, fother, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be faved, but only Jesus Christ.' May God give the reader a right understanding in these facts! 'To him that believeth, all things are 'possible, but to them that are unbelieving 'nothing is pure,' Titus, i. 15.

During this period we-remained at Cadiz until our ship got laden. We sailed about the 4th of November; and, having a good passage, we arrived in London the month following, to my comfort, with heartfelt gratitude to God for his rich and unspeakable mercies.

On my return I had but one text which puzzled me, or that the devil endeavoured to buffet me with, viz. Rom. xi. 6. and as I had heard of the Rev. Mr. Romaine, and his great knowledge in the Scriptures, I wished much to hear him preach. One day I went to Blackfriars Church, and, to my great satisfaction and surprise, he preached from that very text. He very clearly shewed the difference between human works and free election, which is according to God's sovereign will and pleasure. These glad tidings set me entirely at liberty, and I went out of the church rejoicing, seeing my spots were those of God's children. I went to Westminster Chapel,

I, ignorant of his righteoufness, Set up my labours in its place; Forgot for why his blood was shed, And pray'd and fasted in his stead.

He dy'd for finners—I am one!
'Might not his blood for me atone?
Tho' I am nothing else but fin,
Yet surely he can make me clean!

Thus light came in, and I believ'd; Myself forgot, and help receiv'd! My Saviour then I know I found, For, eas'd from guilt, no more I groan'd.

O, happy hour, in which I ceas'd To mourn, for then I found a rest! My foul and Christ were now as one—Thy light, O Jesus, in me shone!

When our ship was got ready for sea again, I was entreated by the captain to go in her once more; but, as I felt myfelf as happy as I could wish to be in this life, I for some time refused; however, the advice of my friends at last prevailed; and, in full resignation to the will of God, I again embarked for Cadiz in March, 1775. We had a very good passage, without any material accident, until we arrived off the Bay of Cadiz; when one Sunday, just as we were going into the harbour, the ship struck against a rock, and knocked off a garboard plank, which is the noxt to the keel. In an instant all hands were in the greatest confusion, and began with loud cries to call on God to have mercy on them. Although I could not fwim, and faw no way of escaping death, I felt no dread in my then situation, having no desire to live. I even rejoiced in spirit, thinking this death would be fudden glory. But the fulness of time was not yet come. The people near to me were much aftonished in seeing me thus calm and refigned; but I told them of the peace of God, which

which through fovereign grace I enjoyed, and these words were that instant in my mind;

" Christ is my pilot wise, my compass is his word;

" My foul each florm defies, while I have such a Lord.

"I trust his faithfulness and power,
"To fave me in the trying hour.

"Though rocks and quickfands deep through all my paffage lie,

44 Yet Christ shall safely keep and guide me with his eye.

" How can I fink with fuch a prop,

"That bears the world and all things up."

At this time there were many large Spanish flukers or passage vessels full of people crossing the channel, who, feeing our condition, a number of them came alongside of us. As many hands as could be employed began to work; some at our three pumps, and the rest unloading the ship as fast as possible. There being only a fingle rock, called the Porpus, on which we struck, we soon got off it, and providentially it was then high water; we therefore run the ship ashore at the nearest place to keep her from finking. After many tides, with a great deal of care and industry, we got her repaired again. When we had dispatched our business at Cadiz, we went to Gibraltar, and from thence to Malaga, a very pleasant and rich city, where there is one of N 5 the

the finest cathedrals I had ever seen. It had been above fifty years in building, as I heard, though it was not then quite finished; great part of the inside, however, was completed, and highly decorated with the richest marble columns and many superb paintings; it was lighted occasionally by an amazing number of wax tapers of different sizes, some of which were as thick as a man's thigh; these, however, were only used on some of their grand sessions.

I was very much shocked at the custom of bull-baiting, and other diversions which prevailed here on Sunday evenings, to the great scandal of Christianity and morals. I used to express my abhorrence of it to a priest whom I met with. I had frequent contests about religion with the reverend father, in which he took great pains to make a profelyte of me to his church; and I no less to convert him to On these occasions I used to produce my Bible, and shew him in what points his church erred. He then said he had been in-England, and that every person there read the Bible, which was very wrong; but I answered him, that Christ desired us to search the Scriptures. In his zeal for my conversion, he solicited me to go to one of the universities in Spain, and declared that I should have my education education free; and told me, if I got myself made a priest, I might in time become even a Pope; and he said that Pope Benedict was a black man. As I was ever desirous of learning, I paused some time upon this temptation, and thought by being crasty (by going to the university), I might catch some with guile; but again I began to think it would only be hypocrify in me to embrace his offer, as I could not in conscience conform to the opinions of his church. I was therefore enabled to regard the word of God, which says, 'Come out from amongst them,' and refused Father Vincent's offer. So we parted without conviction on either side.

Having taken at this place some fine wines, fruits, and money, we proceeded to Cadiz, where we took about two tons more of money, &c. and then failed for England in the month of June. When we were about the north latitude 42, we had contrary wind for feveral days, and the ship did not make in that time above fix or feven miles straight course. This made the captain exceedingly feetful and peevish; and I was very forry to hear God's most holy name often blaiphemed by him. One day, as he was in that impious mood, a young gentleman on board, who was a paffenge, reproved him, and faid he wrong; for we ought to be thankful to God N 6 fo for all things, as we were not in want of any thing on board; and though the wind was contrary for us, yet it was fair for some others, who perhaps stood in more need of it than we. I immediately feconded this young gentleman with fome boldness, and said we had not the least cause to murmur, for that the Lord was better to us than we deserved, and that he had done all things well. pected that the captain would be very angry with me for speaking, but he replied not a word. However, before that time, or hour, on the following day, being the 21st of June, much to our great joy and astonishment, we saw the providential hand of our benign Creator, whose ways with his blind creatures are past finding out. The preceding night I dreamed that I saw a boat immediately off the starboard main shrouds; and exactly half past one o'clock the following day at noon, while I was below, just as we had dined in the cabin, the man at the helm cried out, A boat! which brought my dream that instant into my mind. I was the first man that jumped on the deck; and looking from the shrouds onward, according to my dream, I descried a little boat at some distance; but, as the waves were high, it was as much as we could do fometimes to difcern her: we, however, stopped the ship's way, and the boat, which was extremely fmall, came alongfide with eleven miferable men, whom we took on board immediately. To all human appearance, these people must have perished in the course of one hour, or less; the boat being small, it barely contained them. we took them up they were half drowned, and had no victuals, compass, water, or any other necessary whatsoever, and had only one bit of an oar to stir with, and that right before the wind; so that they were obliged to trust entirely to the mercy of the waves. As foon as we got them all on board, they bowed themselves on their knees, and, with hands and voices lifted up to heaven, thanked God for their deliverance; and I trust that my prayers were not wanting amongst them at the fame time. This mercy of the Lord quite melted me, and I recollected his words, which I saw thus verified in the 107th Psalm, 'O ' give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. Hungry and thirsty; their souls fainted in them. They cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their diffresses. And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children children children of men! For he fatisfieth the longing foul, and filleth the hungry foul with soodness.

Such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death:

'Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he faved them out of their dif-

• tresses. They that go down to the sea in ships; that do business in great waters; these fee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. Whoso is wife and will observe these things, even they shall understand the · loving kindness of the Lord.'

The poor distressed captain said, 'that the · Lord is good; for, feeing that I am not fit to die, he therefore gave me a space of time to repent.' I was very glad to hear this expression, and took an opportunity, when convenient, of talking to him on the providence of God. They told us they were Portuguese, and were in a brig loaded with corn, which shifted that morning at five o'clock, owing to which the vessel sunk that instant with two of the crew; and how these eleven got into the boat (which was lashed to the deck), not one of them could tell. We provided them with every necessary, and brought them all safe to London: and I hope the Lord gave them repentance unto eternal life.

At our arrival, I was happy once more amongst my friends and brethren till November, when my old friend, the celebrated Doctor Irving bought a remarkable fine floop, about 150 tons. He had a mind for a new adventure in cultivating a plantation at Jamaica, and the Musquito Shore; asked me to go with him, and said that he would trust me with his estate in preference to any one. By the advice, therefore, of my friends, I accepted of the offer, knowing that the harvest was fully ripe in those parts, and hoped to be an instrument, under God, of bringing some poor finner to my well-beloved master, Jesus. Christ Before I embarked, I found with the Doctor four Musquito Indians, who were chiefs in their own country, and were brought. here by some English traders for some selfish ends. One of them was the Musquito king's fon, a youth of about eighteen years of age; and whilft he was here he was baptized by the name of George. They were going back at the government's expense, after having , been in England about twelve months, during which they learned to speak pretty good When I came to talk to them about eight days before we failed, I was very much mortified in finding that they had not frequented any churches fince they were here, and were baptized, nor was any attention paid to their morals. I was very forry for this mock Christianity, and had just an opportunity to take fome of them once to church before we failed. We embarked in the month of November 1775, on board of the floop Morning Star, Captain David Miller, and failed for Jamaica. In our passage, I took all the pains that I could to instruct the Indian prince in the doctrines of Christianity, of which he was entirely ignorant; and, to my great joy, he was quite attentive, and received with gladness the truths that the Lord enabled me to set forth to him. I taught him in the compass of eleven days all the letters, and he could put even two or three of them together, and fpell them. I had Fox's Martyrology with cuts, and he used to be very fond of looking into it, and would ask many questions about the papal cruelties he saw depicted there, which I explained to him. fuch progress with this youth, especially in religion, that when I used to go to bed at different hours of the night, if he was in his bed, he would get up on purpose to go to prayer with me, without any other clothes than his shirt; and before he would eat any of his nicals amongst the gentlemen in the cabin, he would fust come to me to pray, as he called it. I was well pleased at this, and took great delight in him, and used much supplication to God for his conversion. full hope of feeing daily every appearance of that change which I could wish; not knowing the devices of Satan, who had many of his emissaries to sow his tares as fast as I sowed the good feed, and pull down as fast as I built up. Thus we went on nearly four-fifths of our passage, when Satan at last got the upper hand. Some of his messengers, seeing this poor heathen much advanced in piety, began to ask him whether I had converted him to Christianity, laughed and made their jest at him, for which I rebuked them as much as a could; but this treatment caused the prince to halt between two opinions. Some of the true fons of Belial, who did not believe that there was any hereafter, told him never to fear the devil, for there was none existing; and if ever he came to the prince, they defired he might be fent to them. Thus they reazed the poor innocent youth, fo that he would not learn his book any more! He would not drink nor carouse with these ungodly actors, nor would he be with me even at prayers. This grieved me very much. endeavoured to persuade him as well as I could, but he would not come; and entreated him very much to tell me his reasons for acting ing thus. At last he asked me, 'How comes it that all the white men on board who canread and write, and observe the sun, and know all things, yet swear, lie, and get drunk, only excepting yourfelf?' I answered him, the reason was, that they did not fear God; and that if any one of them died to they could not go to, or be happy with God. He replied, that if a certain person went to hell he would go to hell too! I was forry to hear this; and, as he fometimes had the tooth ach, and allosome other persons in the ship at the same time, I asked him if their tooth-ach made his eafy? he faid, No. Then I told hum, if he and these people went to hell together, their pains would not make his any lighter. had great weight with him: it depressed his, spirits much; and he became ever after, during the passage, fond of being alone. When we were in the latitude of Martinico, and near making the land, one morning we had a brisk gale of wind, and, carrying too much fail, the mainmast went over the side. Many people were then all about the deck, and the yards, masts, and rigging, came tumbling all about us, yet the:e was not one of us in the least hurt, although some were within a hair's breadth of. being killed; and, particularly, I saw two men who, by the providential hand of God, were most miraculously preserved from being smashed to pieces. On the fifth of January we made Antigua and Montferrat, and ranalong the rest of the islands: and on the fourteenth we arrived at Jamaica. One Sunday, while we were there, I took the Musquito, prince George to church, where he faw the facrament administered. When we came out we faw all kinds of people, almost from the church door for the space of half a mile down to the water-fide, buying and felling all kinds of commodities: and these acts afforded me great matter of exhortation to this youth, who was much aftonished. Our vessel being ready to fail for the Musquito shore, I went with the doctor on board a Guinea-man, to purchase some slaves to carry with us, and cultivate a plantation; and I chose them all of my own countrymen, fome of whom came from Lybia*. On the twelfth of February, we failed from Jamaica, and on the eighteenth arrived at the Musquito shore, at a place called Dupeupy. All our Indian guests now, after I had admonthed them, and a fewcases of liquor given them by the Doctor, took an affectionate leave of us, and went ashore, where they were met by the Mulquito king, and we never faw one of them afterwards. We then failed to the fouthward of the shore, to a place called Cape Gracias a Dios, where there was a large lagoon or lake, which received the emptying of two or three very fine large rivers, and abounded much in fish and land tortoise. Some of the native Indians came on board of us here; and we used them well, and told them we were come to 'dwell amongst them, which they seemed pleased at. So the Doctor and I, with some others, went with them ashore; and they took us to different places to view the land, in order to choose a place to make a plantation of. We fixed on a spot near a river's bank, in a rich soil; and, having got our necessaries out of the sloop, we began to clear away the woods, and plant different kinds of vegetables, which had a quick growth. While we were employed in this manner, our vessel went northward to Black River to trade. While she was there, a Spanish guarda costa met with and took her. This proved very hurtful, and a great embarrassment to us. However, we went on with the culture of the land. We used to make fires every night all around us, to keep off wild beafts, which, as foon as it was dark, fet up a most hideous roaring. Our habitation being far up in the woods, we frequently faw different kinds of animals :

animals; but none of them ever hurt us, extept poisonous snakes, the bite of which the Doctor used to cure by giving to the patient, as foon as possible, about half a tumbler of strong rum, with a good deal of Cayenne pepper in it. In this manner he cured two natives, and one of his own flaves. The Indians were exceedingly fond of the Doctor, and they had good reason for it; for I believe they never had fuch an useful man amongst them. They came from all quarters to our dwelling; and some woolwow or flat-headed Indians, who lived fifty or fixty miles above our river, and this fide of the South Sea, brought us a good deal of filver in exchange for our goods. The principal articles we could get from our neighbouring Indians were turtle oil, and shells, little filk grass, and some provisions; but they would not work at any thing for us, except fishing; and a few times they assisted to cut some trees down, in order to build us houses; which they did exactly like the Africans, by the joint labour of men, women, and children. I do not recollect any of them to have had more than two wives. These always accompanied their hushands when they came to our dwelling, and then they generally carried whatever they brought to us, and always fquatted down behind their husbands. Whenever Whenever we gave them any thing to ext, the men and their wives eat separate. I never faw the least fign of incontinence amongst The women are ornamented with beads, and fond of painting themselves; the men also paint, even to excess, both their faces and fhirts: their favourite colour is red. The women generally cultivate the ground, and the men are all fishermen and canoe-ma-Upon the whole, I never met any nation that were so simple in their manners as these people, or had so little ornament in their houses. Neither had they, as I ever could learn, one word expressive of an oath. worst word I ever heard amongst them when they were quarrelling, was one that they had got from the English, which was, "you rascal." I never saw any mode of worship among them; but in this they were not worse than their European brethren or neighbours, for I am forry to fay that there was not one white person in our dwelling, nor any where else, that I saw, in different places I was at on the shore, that was better or more pious than those unenlightened Indians; but they either worked or slept on Sundays; and, to my forrow, working was too much Sunday's employment with ourselves; so much so, that in some length of time we really did not know one

r. This mode of living laid The de and warlike; and they having never been conmoniards. They are great : Impors when they can get them. Who is a to a kill rum from pine-ap-pice, which has every plentiful here; and then who could not get them away from our splace is they feemed to be fingular, in point of nonefly, above any other nation A was ever amongst. The country being hot, we lived under an open shed, where we had all kinds of goods, without a door or lock to any one article; yet we slept in safety, and never lost any thing, or were disturbed. This surprised us a good deal; and the Doctor, mylelt, and others, used to say if we were sto lie in that manner in Europe we should have our throats cut the first night. The Indian governor goes once in a certain time all about the province or critrict, and has a number of men with him as attendant and affiftants. He fettles all the differences among othe people, like the judges here, and is treated with very great respect. He took care to give us timely notice before he came to our habitation, by fending his stick as a token, for rum, lugar, and gunpowder, which we did not refuse sending; and at the same time we made the utmost preparations to receive his honour and his train. When he came with his tribe, and all our neighbouring chieftains, we expected to find him a grave reverend judge, folid and fagacious; but, instead of that, before he and his gang came in fight, we heard them very clamorous; and they even had plundered some of our good neighbouring Indians, having intoxicated them-felves with our liquor. When they arrived we did not know what to make of our new guests, and would gladly have dispensed with the honour of their company. However, having no alternative, we feasted them plentifully all the day till the evening; when the Governor, getting quite drunk, grew very unruly, and struck one of our most friendly chiefs, who was our nearest neighbour, and also took his gold-laced hat from him. At this a great commotion took place; and the Doctor interfered to make peace, as we could all understand one another, but to no purpose; and at last they became so outrageous, that the Doctor, fearing he might get into trouble, left the house, and made the best of his way to the nearest wood, leaving me to do as well as I could among them. I was fo enraged with the Governor, that I could have wished wished to have seen him tied fast to a tree, and flogged for his behaviour; but I had not people enough to cope with his party. I therefore thought of a stratagem to appeale the riot. Recollecting a passage I had read in the Life of Columbus, when he was amongst the Indians in Mexico or Peru, where, on some occasion, he frightened them, by telling them of certain events in the heavens, I had recourse to the same expedient; and it succeeded beyond my most sanguine expectations. When I had formed my determination, I went in the midst of them, and taking hold of the Governor, I pointed up to the heavens. I menaced him and the rest: I told them God lived there, and that he was angry with them, and they must not quarrel so; that they were all brothers, and if they did not leave off and go away quietly, I would take the book (pointing to the Bible), read, and tell God to make them dead. This operated on them like magic. The clamour immediately ceased, and I gave them some rum and a few other things; after which they went away peaceably; and the governor afterwards gave our neighbour, who was called Captain Plasmyah, his hat again. When the Doctor resurned, he was exceedingly glad at my fuccefs in thus getting rid of our troublesome guests.

The Musquito people within our vicinity, out of respect to the Doctor, myself, and his people, made entertainments of the grand kind, called in their tongue tourrie or drykbot. The English of this expression is, a feast of drinking about, of which it seems a corruption of language. The drink confisted of pine-apples roafted, and cafades chewed or beaten in mortars; which, after lying some time, ferments, and becomes so strong as to intoxicate, when drank in any quantity. We had timely notice given to us of the entertainment. A white family, within five miles of us, told us how the drink was made; I and two others went before the time to the village where the mirth was appointed to be held, and there we saw the whole art of making the drink and also the kind of animals that were to be eaten there. I cannot fay the fight of either the drink or the meat were enticing to me. They had some thousands of pine-apples roafting, which they squeezed, dirt and all, into a canoe they had there for the purpole. The casade drink was in beef barrels, and other vessels, and looked exactly like hogwash. Men, women, children, were thus. employed in roafting the pine-apples, and fque zing them with their hands. For food they had many land torpins or tortoifes, some dried dried turtle, and three large alligators alive, and tied fast to the trees. I asked the people what they were going to do with these alligators? and I was told they were to be eaten. I was much surprised at this, and went home not a little disgusted at the preparations. When the day of the feast was come, we took some rum with us, and went to the appointed place, where we found a great affemblage of these people, who received us very kindly. The mirth had begun before we came; and they were dancing with music: and the mufical instruments were nearly the same as those of any other fable people; but, as I thought, much less melodious than any other nation I ever knew. They had many curious gestures in dancing, and a variety of motions and poftures of their bodies, which to me were in no wife attracting. The males danced by themfelves, and the females also by themselves, as with us. The Doctor shewed his people the example, by immediately joining the women's party, though not by their choice. On perceiving the women disgusted, he joined the males. At night there were great illuminations, by fetting fire to many pine trees, while the dryckbot went round merrily by calabashes or gourds: but the liquor might more justly be called eating than drinking

One Owden, the oldest father in the vicinity, was dressed in a strange and terrifying form. Around his body were Ikins adorned with different kinds of feathers, and he had on his head a very large and high head-piece, in the form of a grenadier's cap, with prickles like a porcupine; and he made a certain noise which resembled the cry of an alligator. Our people skipped amongst them out of complaisance, though some could not drink of their tourries. but our rum met with customers enough, and was foon gone. The alligators were killed, and fome of them roasted. Their manner of roasting is by digging a hole in the earth, and filling it with wood, with they burn to coal, and then they lay sticks across, on which they lay the meat. I had a raw piece of the alligator in my hand: it was very rich: I thought it looked like fresh salmon, and it had a most fragrant smell, but I could not eat any of it. This merry-making at last ended without the least discord in any person in the company, although it was made up of different nations and complexions.

The rainy season came on here about the latter end of May, which continued till August very heavily; so that the rivers were over-flowed, and our provisions then in the ground were washed away. I thought this was in fome

fome measure a judgment upon us for working on Sundays, and it hurt my mind very much. I often wished to leave this place, and fail for Europe; for our mode of procedure, and living in this heathenish form, was very irksome to me. The word of God saith, What doth it avail a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" was much and heavily impressed on my mind; and, though I did not know how to speak to the Doctor for my discharge, it was disagreeable for me to flay any longer. But about the middle of June I took courage enough to alk him for it. He was very unwilling at first to grant me my request, but I gave him fo many reasons for it, that at last he consented to my going, and gave me the following cersificate of my behaviour:

• The bearer, Gustavus Vassa, has served • me several years with strict honesty, sobriety, and fidelity. I can, therefore, with

• justice recommend him for these qualifications; and indeed in every respect I confider him as an excellent fervant. I do hereby certify, that he always behaved well, and that he is perfectly trust-worthy.

- Though I was much attached to the Doctor. I was happy when he consented to my going. I got every thing ready for my departure, and hired fome Indians, with a large canoe, to carry me off. All my poor countrymen, the flaves, when they heard of my leaving them, were very forry, as I had always treated them with care and affection, and did every thing I could to comfort the poor creatures, and render their condition easy. Having taken leave of my old friends and companions, on the 18th of June, accompanied by the Doctor, I left that spot of the world, and went southward above twenty miles along the river. There I found a floop, the captain of which told me he was going to Jamaica. Having agreed for my passage with him and one of the owners, who was also on board, named Hughes, the Doctor and I parted, not without shedding tears on both sides. The veffel then failed along the river till night, when she stopped in a lagoon within the same river. During the night a schooner belonging to the same owners came in, and, as she was in want of hands, Hughes, the owner of the floop, asked me to go in the schooner as a sailor, and said he would give me wages. I thanked him; but I faid I wanted to go to Jamaica. He then immediately changed his tone, and fwore, and abused me very much, and asked how I came to be freed? I told him, and faid that I came into that vicinity with Dr. Irving, whom he had feen that day. This account was of no use; he still swore exceedingly at me, and curled the master for a fool that fold me my freedom, and the Doctor for an other in letting me go from him. Then he defired me to go in the schooner, or else I should not go out of the sloop as a freeman. I said this was very hard, and begged to be put on shore again; but he swore that I should not. I said I had been twice amongst the Turks, yet had never feen any fuch usage with them, and much less could I have expected any thing of this kind among the Christians. This incensed him exceedingly; and with a volley of oaths and imprecations, he replied, 'Christians! damn you, you are one of St. Paul's men; but by G-d, except you have St. Paul's or St. · Peter's faith, and walk upon the water to the " shore, you shall not go out of the vessel!" which I now learnt was going amongst the Spaniards towards Carthagena, where fwore he would fell me. I fimply asked him. what right he had to fell me? But, without another word, he made fome of his people tie ropes round each of my ancles, and also to each wrift, and another rope round my body, body, and hoisted me up without letting my feet touch or rest upon any thing. Thus I hung, without any crime committed, and without Judge or Jury, merely because I was a free man, and could not by the law get any redress from a white person in those parts of the world. I was in great pain from my fituation, and cried and begged very hard for fome mercy, but all in vain. My tyrant in a rage brought a musket out of the cabin, and loaded it before me and the crew, and swore that he would shoot me if I cried any more. I had now no alternative; I therefore remained filent, feeing not one white man on board who faid a word in my behalf. I hung in that manner from between ten and eleven o' clock at night till about one in the morning a when, finding my cruel abuser fast asleep, I begged some of his flaves to flacken the rope that was round my body, that my feet might rest on something, This they did at the risk of being cruelly abused by their master, who beat some of them severely at first for not tying me when he commanded them. Whilst I remained in this condition, till between five and fix o' clock next morning, I trust prayed to God to forgive this blasphemer, who cared not what he did, but when he got up out of his sleep in the morning was of the very same temper temper and disposition as when he left me at night. When they got up the anchor, and the vessel was getting under way, I once more cried and begged to be released; and now, being fortunately in the way of their hoisting When I was let the fails, they loofed me. down, I spoke to one Mr. Cox, a carpenter, whom I knew on board, on the impropriety of this conduct. He also knew the Doctor, and the good opinion he ever had of me. This man then went to the captain, and told him not to carry me away in that manner; that I was the Doctor's steward, who regarded me very highly, and would refent this ulage when he should come to know it. On which he defired a young man to put me ashore in a small canoe I brought with me. This found gladdened my heart, and I got hastily into the canoe, and fet off, whilst my tyrant was down in the cabin; but he foon spied me out, when I was not above thirty or forty yards from the veffel, and running upon the deck with a loaded musket in his hand, he presented it at me, and Iwore heavily and dreadfully that he would shoot me that instant, if I did not come back on hoard. As I knew the wretch would have done as he said, without hefitation, I put pack to the vessel again; but, as the good Lord would have it, just as I was alongside, he was abuling O 5

abuling the captain for letting me go from the vellel; which the captain returned, and both of them foon got into a very great heat. The young man that was with me, now got out of the canoe; the vessel was failing on fast with a smooth sea; and I then thought it was neck or nothing, so at that instant I set off again, for my life, in the canoe, towards the shore; and fortunately the confusion was so great amongst them on board, that I got out of the reach of the musket-shot, unnoticed, while the veffel sailed on with a fair wind a different way; so that they could not overtake me without tacking: but, even before that could be done, I should have been on shore. which I foon reached, with many thanks to God for this unexpected deliverance. I then went and told the other owner, who lived near the shore (with whom I had agreed for my passage), of the usage I had met with. He was very much aftonished, and appeared very forry for it. After treating me with kindness, he gave me fome refreshment, and three heads of roafted Indian corn, for a voyage of about eighteen miles fouth, to look for another vessel. He then directed me to an Indian chief of a district, who was also the Musquito admiral, and had once been at our dwelling; after which I fet off with the canoe across a large lagoon:

lagoon alone (for I could not get any one to affist me), though I was much jaded, and had pains in my bowels, by means of the rope I had hung by the night before. I was therefore at different times unable to manage the canoe, for the paddling was very laborious. However, a little before dark, I got to my deftined place, where some of the Indians knew me, and received me kindly. I asked for the admiral; and they conducted me to his dwelling. He was glad to see me, and refreshed me with such things as the place asforded; and I had a hammock to fleep in. They acted towards me more like Christians than those whites I was amongst the last night, though they had been baptifed. I told the admiral I wanted to go to the next port to get a vessel to carry me to Jamaica; and requested him to fend the canoe back which I then had, for which I was to pay him. He agreed with me, and fent five able Indians with a large canoe to carry my things to my intended place, about fifty miles; and we fet off the next morning. When we got out of the lagoon, and went along shore, the sea was so high, that the canoe was oftentimes very near being filled with water. We were obliged to go ashore, and drag her across different necks of land; we were also two nights in the fwamps, fwamps, which swarmed with Mulquito flies, and they proved troublesome to us. This tiresome journey of land and water ended, however, on the third day, to my great joy; and I got on board of a sloop commanded by one Captain Jenning. She was then partly loaded, and he told me he was expecting daily to fail for Jamaica; and having agreed with me to work my pallage, I went to work accordingly. I was not many days on board before we failed; but, to my forrow. and disappointment, though weed to such tricks, we went to the fouthward along the Musquito shore, instead of steering for Jamaica. I was compelled to affift in cutting a great deal of mahogany wood on the shore as: we coasted along it, and load the vessel with it, before she sailed. This fretted me much; but, as I did not know how to help myself among these deceivers, I thought patience was the only remedy I had left, and even that was forced. There was much hard work and. little victuals on board, except by good luck we happened to catch turtles. On this coast there was also a particular kind of fish called. manatee, which is most excellent eating, and the flesh is more like beef than fish: the scales are as large as a shilling, and the skin thicker than I eyer faw that of any other fish. Within the brackish waters along shore there were likewise vast numbers of alligators, which made the fish fearce. I was on board this floop fixteen days, during which, in our coasting, we came to another place, where there was a finaller sloop called the Indian Queen, commanded by one John Baker. He also was an Englishman, and had been a long time along the shore trading for turtle shells and silver, and had got a good quantity of each on board. He wanted fome hands very much; and, understanding I was a free-man, and wanted to go to Jamaica, he told me if he could get one or two men more, that he would fail immediately for that island; he also pretended to shew me some marks of attention and respect, and promised to give me forty-five shillings sterling a month if I would go with him. I thought this much better than cutting wood for nothing. I therefore told the other captain that I wanted to go to Jamaica in the other vessel; but he would not listen to me; and, seeing me resolved to go in a day or two, he got the vessel under sail, intending to carry me away against my will. This treatment mortified me extremely. I immediately according to the agreement I had made with the captain of the Indian Queen, called for her boat, which was lying near us, and it came along-fide; and, by the means of a north pole shipmate which I met with in the floop I was in, I got my things into the boat, and went on board of the Indian Queen, July the 10th. A few days after I was there, we got all things ready and failed; but again, to my great mortification, this vessel still went to the fouth, nearly as far as Carthagena. trading along the coast, instead of going to Jamaica, as the captain had promised me: and, what was worst of all, he was a very cruel and bloody-minded man, and was a horrid blasphemer. Among others, he had a white pilot, one Stoker, whom he beat often as severely as he did some negroes he had on board. One night in particular, after he had beaten this man most cruelly, he put him into the boat, and made two negroes row him to a desolate key, or small island; and he loaded two pistols, and fwore bitterly that he would fhoot the negroes if they brought Stoker on board again. There was not the least' doubt but that he would do as he faid, and the two poor fellows were obliged to obey the cruel mandate; but, when the captain was afleep, the two negroes took a blanket, at the risque of their lives, and carried it to the unfortunate Stoker, which I believe was the means of faving his life from the annovance of infects. A great deal of entreaty was

was used with the captain the next day, before he would consent to let Stoker come on board; and when the poor man was brought on board he was very ill, from his fituation during the night, and he remained so till he was drowned a little time after. As we failed fouthward we came to many uninhabited islands, which were overgrown with fine large cocoa nut trees. As I was very much in want of provisions, I brought a boat load of the nuts on board, which lasted me and others for feveral weeks, and afforded us many a delicious repast in our scarcity. One day, before this, I could not help obferving the providential hand of God, that ever supplies all our wants, though in the ways and manner we know not. I had been a whole day without food, and made fignals for boats to come off, but in vain. I therefore earnestly prayed to God for relief in my need; and at the close of the evening I went off the deck. Just as I laid 'down I heard a noise on the deck; and, not knowing what it meant, I went directly on the deck again, when what should I see but a fine large fish, about feven or eight pounds, which had jumped aboard! I took it, and admired, with thanks, the good hand of God; and what I confidered as not less extraordinary, the captain, who was very avaricious, did did not attempt to take it from me, there being only him and I on board; for the rest were all gone ashore trading. Sometimes the people did not come off for some days: this used to fret the captain, and then he would vent his fury on me by beating me, or making me feel in other cruel ways. One day especially, in his wild, wicked, and mad career, after striking me several times with different things, and once across my mouth. even with a red burning slick out of the fire, he got a barrel of gunpowder on the deck, and fwore that he would blow up the I was then at my wit's end, and earnestly prayed to God to direct me. head was out of the barrel; and the captain took a lighted stick out of the fire to blow himself and me up, because there was a vessel then in fight coming in, which he supposed was a Spanish Guarda Costa, and he was afraid of falling into their hands. Seeing this, I got an axe, unnoticed by him, and placed myself between him and the powder, having resolved in myself, as foon as he attempted to put the fire in the barrel, to chop him down that instant. more than an hour in this fituation; during which he struck me often, still keeping the fire in his hand for this wicked purpole. really should have thought myself justifiable in any other part of the world if I had killed him, and prayed to God, who gave me a mind which rested solely on himself. I prayed for resignation, that his will might be done: and the following two portions of his holy word, which occurred to my mind, buoved up my hope, and kept me from taking the life of this wicked man. • He hath deter-· He hath detere mined the times before appointed, and fet bounds to our habitations. Acts xvii. 26. And, 'Who is there among you that feareth, the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his fervant, that walketh in darkness and hath no ight? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God, Isaiah I. 10. And this, by the grace of God. I was enabled to do. I found him a present help in the time of need, and the captain's fury began to subfide as the night approached; but I found,

The next morning we discovered that the vessel which had caused such a sury in the captain was an English sloop. They soon came to an anchor where we were, and, to my no small surprise, I learned that Dr. Irving was on board of her on his way from the Musquito shore to Jamaica. I was for going immediately.

immediately to see this old master and friend, but the captain would not fuffer me to leave the vessel. I then informed the Doctor, by letter, how I was treated, and begged that he would take me out of the floop: But he informed me that it was not in his power, as he was a passenger himself; but he sent me fome rum and fugar for my own use. I now learned that, after I had left the estate which I managed for this gentleman on the Musquito shore, during which the slaves were well fed and comfortable, a white overfeer had supplied my place: This man, through inhumanity and ill-judged avarice, beat and cut the poor flaves most unmercifully; and the consequence was, that every one got into a large Puriogua canoe, and endeavoured to escape; but, not knowing where to go, or how to manage the canoe, they were all drowned; in consequence of which the Doctor's plantation was left uncultivated, and he was now returning to Jamaica to purchase more flaves, and stock it again.

On the 14th of October, the Indian Queen arrived at Kingston in Jamaica. When we were unloaded I demanded my wages, which amounted to eight pounds five shillings sterling; but Captain Baker refused to give me one farthing, although it was the hardest

I found out Dr. Irving upon this, and acquainted him of the captain's knavery. did all he could to help me to get my money; and we went to every magistrate in Kingston (and there were nine), but they all refused to do any thing for me, and faid my oath could not be admitted against a white man. Nor was this all; for Baker threatened that he would beat me severely if he could catch me, for attempting to demand my money; and this he would have done; but I got, by means of Dr. Irving, under the protection of Capt. Douglas, of the Squirrel man of war. I thought this exceeding hard usage; though indeed I found it to be too much the practice there to pay free negro men for their labour in this manner.

One day I went with a free negro taylor, named Joe Diamond, to one Mr. Cochran who was indebted to him fome trifling fum; and the man, not being able to get his money, began to murmur. The other immediately took a horse-whip to pay him with it; but, by the help of a good pair of heels, the taylor got off. Such oppressions as these made me seek for a vessel to get off the island as sast as I could: and, by the mercy of God, I found a ship in November bound for England land, when I embarked with a convoy, after having taken a last farewel of Doctor Irving. When I left Jamaica he was employed in refining sugars; and some months after my arrival in England I learned, with much forrow, that this my amiable friend was dead, owing to his having eaten some poisoned fish. We had many heavy gales of wind in our

On January the feventh, 1777, we arrived at Plymouth, I was happy once more to tread upon English ground; and, after passing some little time at Plymouth and Exeter, among some pious friends, whom I was happy to see, I went to London with a heart replete with thanks to God for past mercies.

Different transactions of the author's life till the present time—His application to the late Bishop of London to be appointed a missionary to Africa—Some account of his share in the conduct of the late expedition to Sierra Leona—Petition to the Queen—His marriage—Conclusion.

Such were the various scenes which I was a witness to, and the fortune I experienced until the year 1777. Since that period my life has been more uniform, and the incidents of it sewer, than in any other equal number of years preceding; I therefore hasten to the conclusion of a narrative, which I fear the reader may think already sufficiently tedious.

I had suffered so many impositions in my commercial transactions in different parts of the world, that I became heartily disgusted with the seafaring life, and was determined not to return to it at least for some time. I therefore once more engaged in service shortly after my return, and continued for the most part in this situation until 1784.

Soon after my arrival in London, I saw a remarkable circumstance relative to African complexion.

complexion, which I thought fo extraordinary that I beg leave just to mention it: A white negro woman, that I had formerly feen in London and other parts, had married a white man by whom she had three boys, and they were every one mulattoes, and yet they had fine light hair. In 1779, I served Governor Macnamara, who had been a confiderable time on the coast of Africa. In the time of my service I used to ask frequently other fervants to join me in family prayer; but this only excited their mockery. However the Governor understanding that I was of a religious turn, wished to know what religion [was of; I told him I was a protestant of the church of England, agreeable to the thirtynine articles of that church; and that whomfoever I found to preach according to that doctrine, those I would hear. A few days after this, we had some more discourse on the fame subject; when he said he would, if I chose, as he thought I might be of service in converting my countrymen to the Gospel faith, get me sent out as a missionary to Africa. Lat first refused going, and told him how I had been ferved on a like occasion by fome white people the last voyage I went to Jamaica, when I attempted, (if it were the will of God) to be the means of converting the Indian prince; and faid I supposed they would would ferve me worse than Alexander the coppersmith did t. Paul, if I should attempt to go amongst them in Africa. He told me not t fear, for he would apply to the Bishop of London to get me ordained. On these terms I consented to the Governor's proposal to go to Africa, in hope of doing good, if possible, amongst my countrymen; so, in order to have me sent out properly, we immediately wrote the following letters to the late Bishop of London:

To the Right Reverend Father in God, ROBERT, Lord Bishop of London,

The MEMORIAL of Gustavus Vassa, sheweth,

THAT your memorialist is a native of Africa, and has a knowledge of the manners and customs of the inhabitants of that country.

That your memorialist has resided in different parts of Europe for twenty-two years last past, and embraced the Christian faith in the year 1759.

That your memorialist is desirous of returning to Africa as a missionary, if encouraged by your Lordship, in hopes of being able to prevail upon his countrymen to become Christians; and your memorialist is the more induced to undertake the same from the success

cels that has attended the like undertakings when encouraged by the Portuguese through their different settlements on the coast of Africa, and also by the Dutch: both governments encouraged the blacks, who by their education are qualified to undertake the fame, and are found more proper than European clergymen, unacquainted with the language and customs of the country.

Your memorialist's only motive for soliciting the office of a missionary is, that he may be a means, under God, of reforming his countrymen, and perfuading them to embrace the christian religion. Therefore your memorialist humbly prays your Lordship's encouragement and support in the undertaking.

GUSTAVUS VASSĂ.

At Mr. Guthric's, Taylor, No. 17, Hedge-lane.

My Lord I have refided near feven years on the coast of Africa, for most part of the time as commanding officer. knowledge I have of the country and its inhabitants, I am inclined to think within plan will be attended with great fuccess, if countenanced by your Lordship. beg leave further to represent to your Lord-Thip that the like attempts, when encouraged by other governments, have met with uncommon common fuccess; and at this very time I know a very respectable character a black priest at Cape Coast Castle. I know the within-named Gustavus Vassa, and believe him a moral good man. I have the honour to be,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's humble and obedient servant,

MATT. MACNAMARA.

Grove, 11th March 1779.

This letter was also accompanied by the following from Doctor Wallace, who had refided in Africa for many years, and whose sentiments on the subject of the African mission were the same with Governor Macnamora's:

My Lord, March 13, 1779.

I have resided near five years on Senegambia on the coast of Africa, and have had the honour of filling very considerable employments in that province. I do approve of the within plan, and think the undertaking very laudably and proper, and that it deferves your Lordship's protection and encouragement, in which case it must be attended with the intended success. I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's

humble and obedient fervant,

THOMAS WALLACE.

With

With these letters, I waited on the Bishop by the Governor's desire, and presented them to his Lordship. He received me with much condescension and politeness; but, from some certain scruples of delicacy, and saying the Bishops were not of opinion in sending a new missionaryto Africa, he declined to ordain me.

My fole motive for thus dwelling on this transaction, or inserting these papers, is the opinion which gentlemen of sense and education, who are acquainted with Africa, entertain of the probability of converting the inhabitants of it to the faith of Jesus Christ, if the attempt were countenanced by the legislature.

Shortly after this I left the Governor, and ferved a nobleman in the Dorfetshire militia, with whom I was encamped at Coxheath for some time; but the operations there were too minute and uninteresting to make a detail of.

In the year 1783, I visited eight counties in Wales, from motives of curiosity. While I was in that part of the country I was led to go down into a coal-pit in Shropshire, but my curiosity nearly cost me my life; for while I was in the pit the coals fell in, and buried one poor man, who was not far from me: upon this I got out as fast I could, thinking the surface of the earth the safest part of it.

In the spring of 1784, I thought of visiting old old ocean again. In consequence of this I embarked as steward on b ard a fine new ship called the London, commanded by Martin Hopkins, and sailed for New York. I admired this city very much; it is large and well built, and abounds with provisions of all kinds.

Our ship having got laden, we returned to London in January 1785. When she was ready again for another voyage, the captain being an agreeable man, I failed with him from hence in the spring, March 1785, for Philadelphia. On the 5th of April we took our departure from the land's end, with a pleasant gale; and about nine o'clock that night the moon shone bright, and the sea was smooth, while our ship was going free by the wind at the rate of about four or five miles an hour.—At this time another ship was going nearly as fast as we on the opposite point, meeting us right in the teeth, yet none on board observed either ship until we struck each other forcibly head and head, to the astonishment and consternation of both crews. She did us much damage, but I believe we did her more; for when we passed by each other, which we did very quickly, they called to us to bring to, and hoift out our boats, but we had enough to do to mind ourselves; and in about eight minutes we faw no more of her. We refitted fitted as well as we could the next day, and proceeded on our voyage, and in May arrived at Philadelphia.

I was very glad to see this savourite old town once more; and my pleasure was much increased in seeing the worthy Quakers freeing and easing the burthens of many of my oppressed African brethren. It rejoice my heart when one of these friendly people took me to see a free-school they had erected for every denomination of black people, whose minds are cultivated here, and forwarded to virtue; and thus they are made useful members of the community. Does not the success of this practice say loudly to the planters, in the language of scripture—"Go ye, and do likewise?"

In October 1785, I was accompanied by fome of the Africans, and presented this address of thanks to the gentlemen called Friends or Quakers, in Whitehart-court, Lombardsteet:

GENTLEMEN.

By reading your book, intitled, A Caution to Great Britain and her Colonies, concerning the Calamitous State of the enflaved Negroes, We, part of the poor, oppressed, needy, and much degraded negroes desire to approach you, with this address of thanks, with our inmost love and warmest acknow-acknowledgment; and with the deepest sense of your benevolence, unwearied labour, and kind interposition, towards breaking the yoke of slavery, and to administer a little comfort and ease to thousands and tens of thousands of very grievously afflicted and too heavy burthened negroes.

Gentlemen, could you, by preseverance, at last be enabled, under God, to lighten in any degree the heavy burthen of the afflicted, no doubt it would, in some measure, be the possible means, under God, of saving the souls of many of the oppressors; and if so, sure we are that the God, whose eyes are ever upon all his creatures, and always rewards every true act of virtue, and regards the prayers of the oppressed, will give to you and yours those blessings which it is not in our power to express or conceive, but which we, as a part of those captivated, oppressed, and afflicted people, most earnestly wish and pray for.

These gentlemen received us very kindly, with a promise to exert themselves on behalf of the oppressed Africans, and we parted.

While in town, I chanced once to be invited to a Quaker's wedding. The simple and yet expressive mode used at their sclemnizations is worthy of note. The sollowing is the true form of it:

Near the close of a meeting for worthip, P 3 wherein wherein there are frequently seasonable exhortations from some of their ministers, the bride and bridegroom stand up, and, taking each other by the hand in a solemn manner, the man audibly declares to this purpose:

"Friends, in the fear of the Lord, and before this affembly, I take this my friend, M. N. to be my wife; promifing, through divine affiftance, to be unto her a loving and faithful husband until it shall please the Lord by death to separate us:" and the woman makes the like declaration. Then the man and woman sign their names to the certificate, and as many witnesses as have a mind. I had the honour to subscribe mine to a certificate in Whitehart-Court, Lombard-Street. This mode I highly recommend.

We returned to London in August; and our ship not going immediately to sea, I shipped as a steward in an American ship called the Harmony, Captain John Willett, and left London in March 1786, bound to Philadelphia. Eleven days after failing, we carried our foremast away. We had a nine weeks passage, which caused our trip not to succeed well, the market for our goods proving bad; and, to make it worse, my commander began to play me the like tricks as others too often practice on free negroes in the West Indies. But, I thank God, I found many friends here, who who in fome measure prevented him. On my return to London in August, I was very agreeably surprised to find, that the benevolence of government had adopted the plan of fome philanthropic individuals, to fend the Africans from hence to their native quarter, and that fome vessels were then engaged to carry them to Sierra Leona; an act which redounded to the honour of all concerned in its promotion, and filted me with prayers and much rejoicing. There was then in the city a select committee of gentlemen for the black poor, to some of whom I had the honour of being known; and, as foon as they heard of my arrival, they fent for me to the committee. When I came there, they informed me of the intention of government; and, as they feemed to think me qualified to superintend part of the undertaking, they asked me to go with the black poor to Africa. I pointed out to them many objections to my going; and particularly I expressed some difficulties on the account of the flave-dealers, as I would certainly oppose their traffic in the human species by every means in my power. However, these objections were overruled by the gentlemen of the committee, who prevailed on me to confent to go; and recommended me to the Honourable Commisfioners of his Majesty's Navy, as a proper perfon to act as commissary for government in the P 4 intended expedition; and they accordingly appointed me in November 17.86 to that office, and gave me sufficient power to act for the government in the capacity of commissary, having received my warrant and the following order:

By the principal Officers and Commissioners of bis Majesty's Navy.

WHEREAS you are directed, by our warrant of the 4th of last month, to receive into your charge, from Mr. Joseph Irwin, the furplus provisions remaining of what was provided for the voyage, as well as the provisions for the support of the black poor, after the landing at Sierra Leona, with the clothing, tools, and all other articles provided at government's expence; and as the provisions were laid in at the rate of two months for the voyage, and for four months after the landing, but the number embarked being fo much less than we expected, whereby there may be a confiderable furplus of provisions, clothing, &c.; these are, in addition to former orders, to direct and require you to appropriate or dispose of such surplus to the best advantage you can for the benefit of government, keeping and rendering to us a faithful account of what you do herein. And for your guidance in preventing any white persons going, who are not intended to have the

the indulgence of being carried thither, we fend you herewith a list of those recommended by the committee for the black poor, as proper persons to be permitted to embark, and a equaint you that you are not to suffer any others to go who do not produce a certificate from the committee for the black poor, of their having their permission for it. For which this shall be your warrant. Dated at the Navy-Office, January 16, 1787.

To Mr. Gustavus Vassa, Commissary of Provisions and Stores for the Black Poor to Sierra Leona.

J. Hinslow. Geo. Marsh. W. Palmer.

I proceeded immediately to the executing of my duty on board the vessels destined for the voyage, where I continued till the March following.

During my continuance in the employment of government I was struck with the flagrant abuses committed by the agent, and endeavoured to remedy them, but without effect. One instance, among many which I could produce, may serve as a specimen. Government had ordered to be provided all necessaries (slops, as they are called, included) for 750 persons; however, not being able to muster more than 426, I was ordered to send the sufficients.

perfluous flops, &c. to the king's stores at Portsmouth; but, when I demanded them for that purpose from the agent, it appeared they had never been bought, though paid for by government. But that was not all, government were not the only objects of peculation; these poor people suffered infinitely more; their accommodations were most wretched: many of them wanted beds, and many more clothing and other necessaries. For the truth of this, and much more, I do not feek credit from my own affertion. I appeal to the testimony of Capt. Thompson, of the Nautilus, who convoyed us, to whom I applied in Februry 1787 for a remedy, when I had remonstrated to the agent in vain, and even brought him to be a witness of the injustice and oppression I complained of. I appeal also to a letter written by these wretched people, so early as the beginning of the preceding January, and published in the Morning Herald, on the fourth of that month, signed by twenty of their chiefs.

I could not filently fuffer government to be thus cheated, and my countrymen plundered and oppressed, and even lest destitute of the necessaries for almost their existence. I therefore informed the Commissioners of the Navy of the agent's proceeding; but my dismission was soon after procured by means of a gentleman gentleman in the city, whom the agent, conficious of his peculation, had deceived by letters; and who, moreover, empowered the same agent to receive on board, at the government expence, a number of persons as passengers, contrary to the orders I received. By this I suffered a considerable loss in my property: however, the Commissioners were satisfied with my conduct, and wrote to Capt. Thomp-

'son, expressing their approbation of it.

Thus provided, they proceeded on their voyage; and at last, worn out by treatment, perhaps not the most mild, and wasted by fickness, brought on by want of medicine, clothes, bedding, &c. they reached Sierra Leona just at the commencement of the rains. At that feason of the year it is impossible to cultivate the lands; their provisions therefore were exhausted before they could derive any benefit from agriculture; and it is not furprifing that many, especially the lascars, whose constitutions are very tender, and who had been . cooped up in ships from October to June, and accommodated in the manner I have mentioned, should be so wasted by their confinement as not long to furvive it.

Thus ended my part of the long-talked of expedition to Sierra Leona; an expedition which, however unfortunate in the event, was humane and politic in its defign; nor was its failure owing to government: every thing was done on their part; but there was evidently fufficient milmanagement attending the conduct and execution of it to defeat its success.

I should not have been so ample in my account of this transaction, had not the share I bore in it been made the subject of partial animadversion, and even my dismission from my employment thought worthy of being made by some matter of public triumph. tives which might influence any person to descend to a petty contest with an obscure African, and to feek gratification by his depreffion, perhaps it is not proper here to inquire into or relate, even if its detection were necessary to my vindication *; but I thank Heaven it is I wish to stand by my own integrity, and not to shelter myself under the impropriety of another; and I trust the behaviour of the Commissioners of the Navy to me entitle me to make this affertion; for after I had been dismissed, March 24, I drew up a memorial thus:

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury.

The Memorial and Petition of Gustavus Vassa, a black man, late Commissary to the Black Poor going to Africa.

• See the Public Advertiser, July 14, 1787.

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

THAT your Lordships memorialist was, by the Honourable the Commissioners of his Majesty's Navy, on the 4th of December last, appointed to the above employment by warrant from that board;

That he accordingly proceeded to the execution of his duty on board of the Vernon, being one of the ships appointed to proceed to

Africa with the above poor;

That your memorialist, to his great grief and astonishment, received a letter of dismifsion from the Honourable Commissioners of the Navy, by your Lordships orders:

That, conscious of having acted with the most perfect fidelity and the greatest assiduity in discharging the trust reposed in him, he is altogether at a loss to conceive the reasons of your Lordships having altered the favourable opinon you were pleafed to conceive of him, fensible that your Lordships would not proceed to so severe a measure without some apparent good cause; he therefore has every reaion to believe that his conduct has been grossly misrepresented to your Lordships, and he is the more confirmed in his opinion, because, by opposing measures of others concerned in the fame expedition, which tended to defeat your Lordships humane intentions, and to put the government to a very censiderable additional additional expence, he created a number of enemies, whose misrepresentations, he has too much reason to believe, laid the foundation of his dismission. Unsupported by friends, and unaided by the advantages of a liberal education, he can only hope for redress from the justice of his cause, in addition to the mortification of having been removed from his employment, and the advantage which he reasonably might have expected to have derived therefrom. He has had the misfortune to have funk a confiderable part of his little property in fitting himself out, and in other expences arising out of his fituation, an account of which he here annexes. memorialist will not trouble your Lordships with a vindication of any part of his conduct, because he knows not of what crimes he is accused; he, however earnestly intreats that you will be pleafed to direct an inquiry into his behaviour during the time he acted in the public service; and, if it be found that his dismission arose from false representations, he is confident that in your Lordships' justice he shall find redress.

Your petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Lordships will take his case into consideration, and that you will be pleased to order payment of the above reserved to account, amounting to 321. 43. and also the wages wages intended, which is most humbly sub-London, May, 12, 1787. mitted.

The above petition was delivered into the hands of their Lordships, who were kind enough, in the space of some few months afterwards, without hearing, to order me 501. sterling—that is, 181. wages for the time (upwards of four months) I acted a faithful part in their fervice-Certainly the fum is more than a free nègro would have had in the western colonies!!!

From that period to the present time my life has passed in an even tenor, and great part of my study and attention has been to affift in the cause of my much injured countrymen.

March the 21st, 1788, I had the honour of prefenting the Queen with a petition on behalf of my African brethren, which was received most graciously by her Majesty *;

To the QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.

MADAM,

Your Majesty's well known benevolence and humanity embolden me to approach your royal presence, trusting that the obscurity of my situation will not prevent your Majesty from attending to the sufferings for which I plead.

* At the request of some of my most particular friends I take the liberty of inferting it here.

Yet I do not solicit your royal pity for my own distress: my sufferings, although numerous, are in a measure forgotten. I supplicate your Majesty's compassion for millions of my African countrymen, who groan under the lash of tyranny in the West Indies.

The oppression and cruelty exercised to the unhappy negroes there, have at length reached the British legislature, and they are now deliberating on its redress; even several persons of property in slaves in the West Indies have petitioned parliament against its continuance, sensible that it is as impolitic as it is unjust—and what is inhuman must ever be unwise.

Your Majesty's reign has been hitherto distinguished by private acts of benevolence and bounty; surely the more extended the mifery is, the greater claim it has to your Majesty's compassion, and the greater must be your Majesty's pleasure in administering to its relief.

I presume, therefore, gracious Queen, to implore your interposition with your royal consort, in favour of the wretched Africans; that, by your Majesty's benevolent influence, a period may now be but to their misery; and that they may be raised from the condition of brutes, to which they are at present degraded, to the rights and situation of men, and

and be admitted to partake of the bleffings of your Majesty's happy government; so shall your Majesty enjoy the heart-felt pleasure of procuring happiness to millions, and be rewarded in the grateful prayers of themselves, and of their posterity.

And may the all-bountiful Creator shower on your Majesty, and the Royal Family, every blessing that this world can afford, and every sulness of joy which divine revelation has promited us in the next.

I am your Majesty's most dutiful and devoted servant to command,

GUST AVUS VASSA, The Oppressed Ethiopian.

No 3, Baldwin's-Gardens.

The negro confolidated act, made by the affembly of Jamaica last year, and the new act of amendment now in agitation the e, contain a proof of the existence of those charges that have been made against the planters relative to the treatment of their slaves.

I hope to have the satisfaction of seeing the renovation of liberty and justice, resting on the British government, to vindicate the honour of cur common nature. These are concerns which do not perhaps belong to any particular office: but, to speak more seriously, to every man of sentiment, actions like these these are the just and sure foundation of future fame; a reversion, though remote, is coveted by fome noble minds as a substantial good. It is upon these grounds that I hope and expect the attention of gentlemen in po-These are designs consonant to the elevation of their rank, and the dignity of their stations: they are ends suitable to the nature of a free and generous government; and, connected with views of empire and dominion, fuited to the benevolence and folid merit of the legislature. It is a pursuit of substantial greatness. May the time come-at least the speculation to me is pleasing-when the fable people shall gratefully commemorate the auspicious æra of extensive freedom. Then shall those persons * particularly be named with praise and honour, who generously proposed and stood forth in the cause of humanity, liberty, and good policy; and brought to the ear of the legislature deligns worthy of royal patronage and adoption. May Heaven make the British senators the disperfers of light, liberty and science, to the uttermost parts of the earth: Then will be

glory

^{*} Granville Sharp, Esq; the Rev. Thomas Clarkson; the Rev. James Ramsay; our approved friends, men of virtue, are an honour to their country, ornamental to human nature, happy in themselves, and benefactors to mankind!

glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and good-will to men, -Glory, honour, peace, &c. to every foul of man that worketh good; to the Britons first, (because to them the gospel is preached), and also to the nations. Those that honour their Maker have merey on the poor.' It is righteousness exalteth a nation, but fin is a reproach to any people; destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity, and the wicked shall fall by their own wickedness.' May the blessings of the Lord be upon the heads of all those who commiserated the cases of the oppressed negroes, and the fear of God prolong their days; and may their expectations be filled with gladness! 'The liberal devise liberal things, and by liberal things shall stand, Isaiah, xxxii. 8. They can fay with pious Job, 'Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Was not my foul grieved for the poor?' Job, xxx. 25.

As the inhuman traffic of flavery is now taken into the confideration of the British legislature, I doubt not, if a system of commerce was established in Africa, the demand for manusactures will most rapidly augment, as the native inhabitants will intensibly adopt the British fashions, manners, customs, &c. In proportion to the civilization, so will be the confumption of British manusactures.

The wear and tear of a continent, nearly twice twice as large as Europe, and rich in vegetable and mineral productions, is much easier conceived than calculated.

A case in point.—It cost the Aborigines of Britain little or nothing in clothing, &c. The difference between their foresathers and the present generation, in point of consumption, is literally infinite. The supposition is most obvious. It will be equally immense in Africa—The same cause, viz. civilization, will ever have the same effect.

It is trading upon fafe grounds. A commercial intercourse with Africa opens an inexhaustible source of wealth to the manusacturing interests of Great Britain, and to all

which the flave-trade is an objection.

If I am not milinformed, the manufacturing interest is equal, if not superior to the landed interests, as to the value, for reasons which will soon appear. The abolition of slavery, so diabelical, will give a most rapid extension of manufactures, which is totally and diametrically opposite to what some interested people affert.

The manufactures of this country must and will, in the nature and reason of things, have a full and constant employ, by supplying the African markets.

Population, the bowels and furface of Africa, abound in valuable and useful returns; the hidden hidden treasures of centuries will be brought to light and into circulation. Industry, enterprize, and mining, will have their full scope, proportionably as they civilize. In a word, it lays open an endless field of commerce to the British manufactures and merchant adventurer. The manufacturing interest and the general interests are synonimous. The abolition of slavery would be in reality an uniyerfal good.

[357]

Tortures, murder, and every other imaginable barbarity and iniquity, are practifed upon the poor slaves with impunity. I hope the flave-trade will be abolished. I pray it may be an event at hand. The great body of manufacturers, uniting in the cause, will confiderably facilitate and expedite it; and, as I have already stated, it is most substantially their interest and advantage, and as such the nation's at large, (except those persons concerned in the manufacturing neck-yokes, collars, chains, hand-cuffs, leg-bolts, thumb-screws, iron-muzzles, and cossins; cats, scourges, and other instruments of tortule used in the flave-trade). In a short time one sentiment alone will prevail, from motives of interest as well as justice and humanity. Europe contains one hundred and twenty millions of inhabitants. Query - How many millions doth Africa contain? Suppoling the Africans, collectively

collectively and individually, to expend 51. a head in raiment and furniture yearly when civilized, &c. an immensity beyond the reach of imagination!

This I conceive to be a theory founded upon facts, and therefore an infallible one. If the blacks were permitted to remain in their own country, they would double themselves every fifteen years. In proportion to such increase will be the demand for manusactures. Cotton and indigo grow spontaneously in most parts of Africa; a consideration this of no small consequence to the manusacturing towns of Great Britain. It opens a most immense, glorious, and happy prospect—the clothing, &c. of a continent ten thousand miles in circumference, and immensely rich in productions of every denomination in return for manusactures.

Since the first publication of my Narrative, I have been in a great variety of scenes in many parts of Great Britain, Ireland and Scotland, an account of which might well be added here*; but this would swell the volume too much, I shall only observe in general, that, in ^{*} Viz. Some curious adventures beneath the earth, in a river in Manchester—and a most astonishing one under the Peak of Derbyshire—and in Sept. 1792, I went 90 fathoms down St. Anthony's Colliery, at Newcastle, under the river Tyne, some hundreds of yards on Durham side.

May 1791, I failed from Liverpool to Dublin where I was very kindly received, and from thence to Cork, and then travelled over many counties in Ireland. I was every where exceedingly well treated, by persons of all ranks. I found the people extremely hospitable, particularly in Belfast, where I took my passage on board of a vessel for Clyde, on the 29th of January, and arrived at Greenock on the 30th. Soon after I returned to London, where I found persons of note from Holland and Germany, who requested of me to go there; and I was glad to hear that an edition of my Narrative had been printed in both places, also in New-York. I remained in London till I heard the debate in the House of Commons on the Slave Trade, April the 2d and 3d. I then went to Soham in Cambridgeshire, and was married on the 7th of April to Miss Cullen, daughter of James and Ann Cullen, late of Ely*.

I have only therefore to request the reader's indulgence, and conclude. I am far from the vanity of thinking there is any merit in this Narrative: I hope censure will be suspended, when it is considered that it was written by one who was as unwilling as unable to adorn the plainness of truth by the colouring of imagination. My life and fortune have been extremely chequered, and my adventures various. Even those I have related are considerably abridged. If any incident in this little work should appear uninteresting and trisling to most readers, I can only fay, as my excuse for mentioning it, that almost every event in my life made an impression on my mind, and influenced my conduct I early accustomed myfelf to look at the hand of God in the minutest occurrence, and to learn from it a lesson of morality and religion; and in this light every circumstance I have r lated was to me of importance. After all, what makes any event important; unless by it's observation we become better and wifer, and learn to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before God!' To those who are possessed of this · spirit, there is scarcely any book or incident so trifling, that does not afford some profit, while to others the experience of ages feems of no use; and even to pour out to them the treafures of wisdom is throwing the jewels of instruction away.
